Preserving Eggs for Winter

Many various methods are recommended for preserving eggs, yet very few manage to keep them in large numbers. Limited supplies are store away for family use, and others are kept in cold storage, at the great ommercial centers, but the busines of preerving them for the market has never become general. There are many obstales to success, which are not always considered. First, only fresh eggs are suitable, yet it is difficult to secure them unmixed with older ones. A single stale egg may cause the less of all in the same package. Second, -Subscribe for the CARBON eggs from hens which run by themselves ADVOCATE $1 per year. The will keep much longer than those from hens which are kept in comany with males. A fertilized egg will keep only one-third as long as one which is serile. This should be kept in view, and the males separated from the heas at least ten days before be ginning to save eggs for storage. An egg which is unfertilized when placed in an incubator, and kept at a temperature of one hundred and three degrees, will remain unchanged and fit for the table at the end of two weeks, while a fertilized egg, under a similar conditions would either be twothirds incubated or rotten. The difference in keeping qualities of the two kinds of eggs is equally great in a cool room, though not so rapidly manifested.

A third important point is to turn the ergs half over at least twice a week, to keep yolk from adhering to shell. If kept in a room where the air is cool, pure and dry, no sait, time or chemicals are needed The eggs may be placed upon racks, to which access is had for turning. But the difficulty with most cellars and even Icecooled rooms is that eggs kept in them through hot weather, are liable to acquire musty flavor. If packed in boxes they may be turned every few days, as indicated
