A FAMILY RELIC.

We all know with what pride, and even ten-erness, the father and mother of a family ofentime regard old pieces of furniture; a pleture, on Northampton street, a piece of cracked china, which to others may seem useless, but which, to them, is closely a piece of cracked china, which to others may seem madeas, but which, to them, is closely identified with the dear old days when they first many the many hear but any matching with the dear old days when they first many the many hear but any matching with the dear old days when they first many the many hear but any matching with the dear old days when they first cess upon two book agents." "went to housekeeping." An instance, worthy of notice, came under the writer's observation at Salina, Knasas: A family, in which a Davis Sewing Machine had been in use for the past 18 cars, were about to lose their first born-a andsome young lafy-by marriage. The question arose as to what the bride should carry to her new home, as the particular gift of father and mother. If was promptly decided that noth-ing could be so appropriate as the sewing ma-chine. The mother looked at the dear old machine, which had served her so faithfully for so many years; upon which baby's wee garments had been made, and upon which had just been finished her wedding trossena. The tears well-ed up into her gentle cyes, and she said to the father, "we cannot let it go." After standing a moment in silance, benderly regarding the fam-ity friend, they decided to give their daughter, to carry to her new home, a New High Arm Davis Vertical Feed Sewing Machine, feeling assarred that it would be to her, in years to come, all that the old machine had been to her parenta.
