That looks to something out of reach; He tries, but cannot check their speech. O! I have tried to make him tell The love that's in his heart, But pride so holds him in a spell That it our lives may part,

Unless I find some way to break Those cruel bunds for sweet love's sake. If I could only make him think My wealth and taken flight. Ol I would really see it sink With unafloyed delight,

If tiest would bring him to my side. I'd gladiy be a poor man's bride. Why need he mind my land and gold, When more I prize his worth? If but our mutual love were told.

Would be so gind, so blest as 1.

Why need his pride our love denv? Ard yet I cannot dare not speak. A maiden can but wait. The one she loves she may not seek, She must abide her fate, And, O! what can a maiden do When he who loves her will not woo!

TIME AND CHANGES. Oh! time will tell of wond'rous things, Of many a changing scene; T'will wait us with unfalling wines. Thro' gloom, thro' joy serene. The sad or gay, the bound or free.

What never yet bath been. The lurking eye may keenly scan, The tongue may loudly rail; But faithfully of man to man, Oh! time will tell the tale,

Time only tells how true the heart Thro' every change can hold; Tho' smilling lips will joys impart. And tender thoughts unfold. When won the prize for which we aim,

How oft that love-enkindled flame Grows cheerless, wan and cold-When beauty charms not as before Nor longer can prevail, How changeful is the valued store, Leave time to tell the tale!

Oh! time will tell a truthful tale Of happiness—of woe; In turn rejoice—in turn bewail— Must every heart below.
In radiant youth, in mellowed age,
We read on Time's unerring page
Life's hist'ry as we go;
