

QUITE FREQUENTLY OF LATE REPORTS from the old world tell us of the rapidly falling health of Hon. James G. Blaine, the most able and brilliant Republican leader of his time.

THE REAL ISSUE BETWEEN THE TWO great political parties is how to get and keep the office.

THE MILL TARIFF BILL WILL COME UP before Congress on Tuesday next, when it is expected that Mr. Mills, who has been seriously prostrated for some time, will be able to appear and defend his measure.

IF THE OWNERS OF COAL FIELDS IN Pennsylvania cannot let the coal that is for the public come forward to market, and if they cannot treat coal miners decently, provide them with houses instead of open huts, and take more than a blood-sucker interest in them, all their coal beds should be confiscated by the State.

"The people of this country went to war not long since to rid itself of the disgrace and crime of slavery. But there never was such robbery of labor, such starving of men, women and children; such mercenary exactions of avarice; such disregard of man's duty to man; such starvation discipline inflicted upon the blacks of the South as upon the miners and miners' families of Pennsylvania.

POLITICAL NOTES. From the New York Age: It is reported that Mr. Chamner M. Depew will soon give to the press a letter referring to the use of his name as a Presidential candidate.

From the Chicago Herald: The majority of the Republican party in Iowa does not want Allison. Iowa is a prohibition State. Allison is an anti-prohibitionist. He has declared himself as such once or twice.

From the Buffalo News: Mr. Depew is the first choice of the majority of the Republicans in this section. What effect that will have upon his chances of nomination—if he should be a candidate—remains to be seen.

From the Washington Critic: Those New York Democrats who try to persuade themselves into the belief that President Cleveland will not be a candidate for re-nomination at St. Louis, are quietly feeling the public pulse as to a boom for Secretary Whitney.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser: The tone of the Republican press through the country is generally favorable to a Presidential ticket made up of Depew and Harrison, they being from States which will undoubtedly decide the contest, and Mr. Depew seeming to many the most available candidate to secure the vote of New York.

OUR PHILADELPHIA LETTER. PHILADELPHIA Pa., April 9, '88. The recent issue of the ADVOCATE was a sockdolager. It did the bifurcating grand. Eight pages! somewhat on a scale of the metropolitan press, and for a town of 3000 inhabitants.

On Friday morning last week, in Cathedral cemetery, a woman and infant were found dead. The woman had given birth to the child during the early morning hours. The cause of death in each case was from an exposure and non-attendance. The case is a heart-rending one; it has its horrible bearings, and the pity of it appealed to the stoutest hearts.

possed, took this means to secure relief from her troubles. Poor soul, let us hope she has found that relief more readily than we are relieved by all that are weary and heavy laden. It seems almost impossible that, in the midst of wealth and charitable institutions, such a thing could happen. But it has happened, and carries with it its solemn reflections and inquiries as to the why and wherefore.

The "boys" declare that it makes their heads swim; that it is a veritable explosion more destructive than dynamite, this luciferous court. An explosion of dynamite would cause no greater sensation or consternation among the whisky and beer people than the four judges who pass upon merits of license applicants, and by their many reds reduce the number for place by more than 75 per cent.

"Our Public Lands for the People" is a good subject, and was very ably handled by Hon. W. M. Lapham. It proved to be the feature of the ADVOCATE. It is full of merit, and deals with solid facts; its argumentativeness is convincing and incontrovertible. While it recognizes the right of property, it yet propagates that idea which involves a higher right—the right to live in the open air; to make a livelihood honorably. What could be more convincing as to the propriety of this higher right than that clear and lucid application, illustrated by Lady Matheson's sole ownership of the Island of Lewis. Her tenants were legally and solely at her mercy and if they cannot pay her the rents she demands they can go into the ocean and submit to those consequences. Is it not monstrous to think and feel that because one was not born with a silver spoon in the mouth that they must be submitted to every and all indignities offered by those fortunate ones who inherited or acquired by conniving, etc. No wonder that Cardinal Manning, the great Catholic divine of England, was moved to say in the nineteenth century in pleading for the wretched: "Will any thoughtful man say that in such a state a father, seeing his wife sinking by want and toil, and his children famishing for lack of bread, is free from a strong temptation to find unlawfully the food which society refuses except on very odious conditions to give him lawfully. Add to this the sense of injustice when, without fault of his own, he is brought down to want. And as men are human, there comes in a sting of resentment when he sees on every side an abundance of food and clothing in those who never labor and never lack."

Well, the Federal officials of Philadelphia are again being subjected to an investigation, conducted by special committee of the U. S. Senate. These Republicans are a pitiable, sickly set of fellows—they cry and howl like stuck pigs because of the office they had but now have not. The special mission of this committee, no doubt, is to particularly harass Hon. W. F. Harris, who dates at all times to be a democrat, and whose actions as a member are so contrary and who believes that to be a democrat is at least as creditable and commendable and worthy of recognition as it is to be a republican.

Hon. John R. Read, the worthy democrat who was selected for U. S. District Attorney for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, is fully installed in his office. The selection of Mr. Read is one of the best appointments made by the President for a position in Pennsylvania. He is a democrat of pre-eminent ability, a lawyer ranking with the best of the Philadelphia bar, and a citizen of unblemished character. The selection of such a man is a credit to the national administration, and will commend the party in power to a continuance in power.

Broadbrim's New York Letter. Special to the CARBON ADVOCATE. Gently and tenderly, last week, loving hands bore to his last resting place on earth all that was mortal of Father John Drumgoole, the founder of the Mission of the Immaculate Conception for Poor Boys, on Lafayette place, in this city. He was also an humble priest; but in the long list of saints who adorn the calendars of the Church of Rome, of canonization can be found none worthy of canonization can be found than John Drumgoole. None among the rich and the great did this priest's mission lie; but among the wretched wails, by man forsaken, whom the priest and the Levite passed by; the inheritors of sin and crime, the children of the lost. No apparent glory here; none of the world's applause; none nor fine clothes; nothing but the blessed approval of his work, for that he lived and died in poverty and abjectness, he marked out the bounds of his mission. The old cathedral on Prince street, where Bishop Dubois and Bishop Hughes labored for many years, is in the centre of a crime-infested neighborhood, where sin grows tall and rank by the wayside. On the south the Five Points stretches its tentacles, slimy and dark, up Most street, fitted with Chinamen, Italian leasards and brigands, rascals and opium joints; Crosby and Elizabeth streets, full of beggars, swindlers and thieves; on the north and east, Elizabeth street, Sullivan street and numerous other streets of minor importance, teeming with all sorts of infamy, lumbard street, the trading-ground of pickpockets and thieves. This neighborhood swarms with thousands of ragged outcasts, all of whom are men, women and children, who never heard the name of Christ or God, except when uttered by profane lips; who are ever in a state of prostration and whose chief prayer is for bread and who looked with pride and hope towards the day when they might earn a living and die in peace and dignity.

On Friday morning last week, in Cathedral cemetery, a woman and infant were found dead. The woman had given birth to the child during the early morning hours. The cause of death in each case was from an exposure and non-attendance. The case is a heart-rending one; it has its horrible bearings, and the pity of it appealed to the stoutest hearts. The identity of the poor woman was a mystery until the following Sunday morning, when the city detectives traced the woman to her late home. She was a married woman—the wife of a worthless fellow, who failed to support her as a husband should. It is supposed that during the afternoon of Thursday she entered the cemetery in the usual way, and spent all night in the dimly suggestive place; having no one to place any dependence upon but her peer relations, she, it is sup-life, with a fair hope of winning wealth and fame. Had it not been for Father Drumgoole nine out of ten of them would have been candidates for the penitentiary, or the galows. Thousands of boys have come out from this institution since its foundation whose lives in the future will lead up to home and distinction, and these all the witnesses of Father Drumgoole and his work. He lived to see the fruition of his holy mission and to evra that reward, prized by good Catholics above all others, the Faust blessing. Quietly, unostentatiously; humble, trustful, hopeful, he lay peacefully down to rest, and to reap his rich reward. It was a lesson not forgotten to see the room in the stately mansion where John Drumgoole lived and died. Through his hands passed millions, but it all went to the poor and the needy of himself he never thought. The furniture of his humble apartment was of the plain and cheapest kind, but plain it was, it was sufficient for all his wants. When the time came to answer his Master's call, there was no doubt, no fear, no faltering; calmly, peacefully, gratefully, he faced radiant with hope and faith, his spirit winged its flight to heaven. It is customary to rear monuments to men who have distinguished themselves among their fellows; but so long as one brick remains above another in the House of the Immaculate Conception, and so long as poor homeless waifs are gathered into his sheltering care, Father John Drumgoole will need no further monument. A series of the week has been the remarkable association discovered between Luther Marsh, one of our most eminent and wealthy lawyers, and a female adventuress, calling herself Madame Dis-D-bar. What can we say and what can we do? None, Dis-D-bar, who claims to be a genuine countess and the left-handed daughter of a king, professes the ability to paint spirit pictures. She takes a plain piece of canvas, holds it over your head, and before you can say Jack, much less Robinson, she will give you a portrait of any one from Julius Caesar to P. N. H. Sullivan. You say you don't believe it. What of it? Mr. Marsh says he has got one hundred of the pictures; that he saw them materialize, and as an evidence of his faith in their ability to raise—the spirits, he has deeded her his magnificent house on Lexington avenue, and everything in it. What can one say when a witness like this stands ready to swear that all he says is true? Madame Dis-D-bar professes to be the daughter of Louis Montez and the King of Spain. The public has a look for a startling revelation in regard to this matter, which will prove a knock-knife to Madame Dis-D-bar. A shocking climax to a double life culminated in murder last week, which has in the minds of the people, the most down broken-hearted to the grave, the brother is in his grave—assassinated by his wife's brother. In Brooklyn lived a gentleman and his sister by the name of Green, both persons of comfortable fortune. From the time of their mother's death the sister kept house for her brother, and as their means were ample their lives were peaceful and happy. Near by was a neighbor by the name of Goldenkirch, a handsome young fellow about twenty-four years of age, who was a frequent visitor at the Green mansion, but as there was a wide disparity between Miss Green's age and his own, she being forty and he twenty-four, nothing was thought of it at first. At length the brother grew jealous, and thought there was something amiss between the visitor and his sister, and eventually forbid him the house; but this made no difference to Goldenkirch or the sister. He came just as before, and one day he called at the Green mansion, and was met at the door by Mr. Green, who forbade him to enter. Goldenkirch pushed him on one side, and Green shot him dead on the spot. It then appeared that Miss Green and Mr. Goldenkirch had been married for five years. He had concealed the fact of his marriage from his family, and she had never mentioned it to her brother, though in daily intercourse with him during the whole period of her marriage life. The fatal secret had been deeply paid for, especially as there appears to have been particular reason why the marriage should not have been made public. The murdered man was upright, honest and industrious, and the last of simple fortune, forty years of age, and accounted for no one for her actions. The murderer is now in jail awaiting trial, and the stricken wife now hovers between life and death.

Old John Maguire, who fell dead at the Anti-Poverty meeting three weeks ago, was buried in a Christian burial on the ground that he was a heretic and a follower of McGlynn. They took old John to Greenwood, but he does not feel comfortable in a society of a lot of heretic Protestants, and he wants to have his four bones dug up and properly interred in consecrated ground where he can rest in peace. The Archdiocese has been invoked, and the Archdiocese has got old John in the right place, and he may put him in a hole where it will require a half-dozen Salvation Armies to get him out.

A funny case was that of Gilson Rhinehart, for twenty years a pilot on Fallow Ferry. Every morning as Rhinehart got off his boat he stepped over to an adjoining wharf and stole six bricks. Now six bricks do not amount to much, but Pilot Rhinehart had done this every morning for many years, so being prosa a thief, the Ferry Company discharged him. He had been living with a comely widow as his wife for over twenty years. Two weeks ago he was taken crazy, and acted so wildly that his neighbors got out of the house. Officers were sent for, and the doctors examined him and committed him to the lunatic asylum. After the other tests, they put a horse of assafoetida under his nose, and that restored him to reason. It then appeared that his madness was assumed for the purpose of getting rid of the woman who was living with, and who was not his wife, and for the purpose of reinstating in his home his real wife whom he had deserted for a wife No. 2 twenty-three years ago. If the original Mrs. Rhinehart is satisfied, I suppose every one else ought to be, but if it were not for the fact that she had a son, Jericho before I would have taken up with such a miserable, second-hand old thieving fellow.

The widow of Lord George Essex Pontifex Drummond, for whose love he served an execution, did not waste much time in grief after his death. It is scarcely six months since her lordly lord died, almost a pauper, in St. Luke's Hospital, and last week her ladyship defied her widow's weels for orange blossoms. And let us hope that, with the honest mechanic that she has now chosen, she will be happier and die with the dignity of a noble house and a dissonant scion of the noble house of Perth. There has been a great deal of commiseration and sympathy about this lordly sequestrance, and while the English reargue may not be considered a first-class school, either for meals or manners, it is questionable if anything as bad as Lord Drummond can be found from the Conqueror down to the present time. He was not altogether responsible for this. "The mother was bad; his father was bad; his mother not above reproach, and his grandfather, now almost ninety, in his younger days was the associate and friend of George the Fourth of unblemished memory; when as the first gentleman of England, he painted London town a bright position, after night in company with prize fighters and butlers. Lord Drummond ran away from home with the woman who was married last week, when he was but a married and sixteen years of age. He absolutely knew nothing, he could hardly write his own name. It is ridiculous of America that one meets with such a case of benighted and benighted ignorance. Electionists, Take Notice—"Your craft is in danger, your occupation is threatened.
