CONSTIPATION

"I called this 'Father of Diseases,' because there is no ailment through which disease so often attacks the system as by the absorption of poisonous gases in the retention of decayed and offensive matter in the stomach and bowels. It is caused by a Torpid Liver, or stomach bile being excited from the blood to produce Nature's own cathartic, and is generally accompanied with such results as:

Loss of Appetite, Sick Headache, Bad Breath, etc.

The treatment of Constipation does not consist merely in unloading the bowels, but in restoring to the system a normal condition, and in securing the system against its recurrence. To secure this, it is necessary to change the diet or disorganizing the system.

SIMMONS' REGULATOR

"My attention, after suffering with Constipation for two or three years, was called to Simmons' Regulator, and, having tried almost everything else, concluded to try it. I first took a single tablet and afterwards reduced the dose to a few tablets daily after each meal. I found that it had done me so much good that I considered it my duty to try it for a longer time, and I have cured me of my ailment. I have not experienced any difficulty. I keep it in my house and would not be without it. Give it to all those who have it, and you will be happy. Wm. V. Lewis, A. S. Clerk Superior Court, 11th Co., Pa.

WALKING HOME WITH MARY.

In all the changing scenes of life--I never spent a happier hour than this walking home with Mary. How often as a boy, when life was young, untried and hearty, by starlight I have seen her home From sing-song or party.

We knew not then how good they were. The stars were passed together, As hand in hand, with lightsome heart, We strove across the heather.

Thy smile these days from Mary's side To distant lands I've wandered, The time I've spent away from her To me seems vainly squandered.

Last night some moon I saw her home; Through rifted clouds, but into mine Her eyes were beaming kindly.

We talked of all the happy past, Of pleasures long departed, And both confessed, as it were since then, We had been heavily-hearted.

And ere we reached her father's home I told her how I missed her, And while we lingered at the gate I stoope and fondly kissed her.

Before we parted, 'Was agreed Our paths no more should vary; No more afar from her I'd roam-- I'm going to marry Mary.

Hours With Men and Women of the Revolution.

DR. FRANKLIN'S ERAND BOY.

[Copyrighted, 1888, by Bank & Wagnall.]

"Would you like to be introduced to Dr. Franklin's errand boy?" asked a friend with whom I was sojourning a few days in Philadelphia, in the year 1861. "He is a most remarkable man," said my friend, "and has been a prominent citizen here for forty-six years."

"I would be the schuylkill to West Philadelphia, and made our way to the Pennsylvania Asylum for the insane. At the entrance gate, my friend, warmly greeted by a courteous old gentleman, apparently about sixty-five years of age, who was introduced to me as Colonel Robert Carr, and I was introduced to him as a citizen of New York in quest of reminiscences of events of our long-past history from the lips of survivors of actors in them.

"The Irish baronet who was one of the commissioners sent to regulate the New England and to assist in smothering our province from the Dutch two hundred years ago."

"Of the same family stock, probably, for I was born in Ireland," he replied. "Come in, gentleman, and be seated. It is an early hour, and we shall have few interruptions."

He led the way to a small furnished room, and there we spent about two hours very profitably with the venerable keeper of the Asylum, and the errand-boy of Dr. Franklin, who was then over eighty-three years of age, and whose career had been checked by many vicissitudes. He was a stout-built, vigorous man, possessed of sound health and remarkable buoyancy of spirit. He assured me that he had not been sick in over sixty years.

"You say you were born in Ireland. My friend tells me that your life has been quite an eventful one?"

"Somewhat," he said. "But it is now well nigh over," he continued. "I try to forget the miseries which are few, and to remember the mercies which are many."

At my request he gave a brief sketch of his life's history. He was brought to Philadelphia from Ireland by his parents when he was six years of age. His father was a school teacher and lived next door to Dr. Franklin. In due time young Carr learned the art of printing with Dr. Bache, Franklin's grandson, and soon rose to the head of the profession in Philadelphia. In 1804, when he was only twenty-six years old, he was awarded the first prize of a society for the best specimens of printing on exhibition. He was employed to print Wilson's "Ornithology" from the manuscript, also a reprint of "Rees's Cyclopaedia." As a young member of the famous Philadelphia military corps known as the "McPherson Blues," he was one of the firing squad on the occasion of the celebration of Washington's funeral by Congress, then in session at Philadelphia. Five of his associates were living in that city at the time of my visit, namely: Charles Breck, aged ninety; S. Palmer, aged eighty-one; S. F. Smith, aged eighty-one; Charles N. Banker, aged eighty-five; Quinton Campbell, aged eighty-five. I saw three of the five veterans at that time.

In 1812 Mr. Carr was commissioned as a young member of the famous Pennsylvania military corps of infantry, and rose to a lieutenant-colonel the following year. Serving faithfully all through the war of 1812-15, Colonel Carr was honorably discharged at its close, in forty years he was the sole survivor of the field officers of the Army of 1812; in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware. He married a daughter of William Barram, the proprietor of the famous Botanic Garden, near Philadelphia, and in right of his wife, after her father's death, he carried it on from 1808 until 1856, a period of more than forty years. He served the State as adjutant-general a few years, and was for a long time an aid-marshal in justice of the peace in Philadelphia. In his days of prosperity he was an active promoter of public enterprises. Deprived of his property by the vicissitudes of fortune in his old age, he accepted the position of gate-keeper at the institution where we found him.

"Our friend tells me," I remarked, "that you were an errand boy for Dr. Franklin for a while."

"Oh, yes," he replied, "I served him as such for the space of nearly two years. We lived next door to Dr. Franklin, in Market street, and he seemed to think much of my father, who was frequently in his house by invitation. I sometimes went there with my father, and Franklin treated me very kindly, having always a pleasant word for me. I was about ten years old when he asked my father to allow me to be errand boy for him. Young as I was, he seemed every minute, and I was very proud. He sent me to the butcher, the grocer, the printer, the bootmaker, the dealer, and to the different gentlemen in the city. He was sick most of the time while I was with him, often suffering great pain from his malady, and yet he continued to write a great deal. I think he wrote two or three pamphlets during the last year of his life. I carried his manuscripts to the printers, and also the proof-sheets. His grandson, Benjamin Franklin Bache, then just out of college, was much with his grandfather, assisted him in reading the proof-sheets. The young man started a newspaper in the fall of 1801, and it was in his establishment that I learned the trade of a printer."

"If you were living with Franklin at the time of his death?" I inquired.

"Yes; for three months before he died I was in his room a great deal, to do errands for the Doctor, for his attendant (Mrs. Heath), and for the family. For two or three weeks, I remember, Dr. Jones came several times every day, and sometimes brought Dr. Rush with him."

"Do you distinctly remember the personal appearance of Franklin?" I inquired.

"Perfectly," he answered. "It made a strong impression on my young mind. When I first began to do errands for him he was quite well--went out frequently and received much company. He was then a strong built man, over seventy years of age, about five feet nine inches in stature, and inclined to corpulence. His complexion was fair, though he was an old man; his eyes were gray and very bright when he was in conversation; his hair was thin and long, but not very gray, his mouth was not large and had a decidedly sweet expression. Franklin was polite and kind to everybody, whether he was a servant or a Senator, for he was always a gentleman. I remember when Washington called to see him, while on his way to New York to be inaugurated President of the United States. They embraced like brothers. Franklin had been suffering much pain that morning, but was relieved at the time of the President's call, when his manner was cheerful, almost playful at times, for he was rejoiced to see his friend. They never met again on earth."

"You say you learned the printer's trade in the establishment of Mr. Bache, Franklin's grandson," I remarked.

"Yes, I was his apprentice from 1792 to 1797. After I had been with him a year, finding me rather expert in detecting errors in proof-sheets, I was frequently employed as an assistant-proof reader and in carrying the corrected sheets to the writers for his paper, 'The Advertiser.' When the government was removed to Philadelphia from New York, Washington was very friendly to Mr. Bache, because he was a near relation to the President, and occasionally wrote something on public matters for 'The Advertiser.' He also had official papers printed at our office. I carried corrected proof-sheets to President Washington, and sometimes assisted him in the reading and making proper printer's marks for corrections, which he did not always understand."

"So you were once an errand-boy for Dr. Franklin and Washington's assistant-proof-reader," I remarked.

"It is even so, and I am proud of the service," said the veteran with a bright smile of satisfaction. "When Washington's friendship for Bache, and occasionally wrote something on public matters for 'The Advertiser.' He also had official papers printed at our office. I carried corrected proof-sheets to President Washington, and sometimes assisted him in the reading and making proper printer's marks for corrections, which he did not always understand."

"So you were once an errand-boy for Dr. Franklin and Washington's assistant-proof-reader," I remarked.

"It is even so, and I am proud of the service," said the veteran with a bright smile of satisfaction. "When Washington's friendship for Bache, and occasionally wrote something on public matters for 'The Advertiser.' He also had official papers printed at our office. I carried corrected proof-sheets to President Washington, and sometimes assisted him in the reading and making proper printer's marks for corrections, which he did not always understand."
