Bofe my eyes is leakin, and had never left the house, and one of my noses don't go. Such are the troubles some poor married women have to contend with in this life.

DISAPPOINTMENTS OF LIFE .-Can anything be more barren than a commonplace life? Can anything be more sordid than the cry, the selfish cry, 'we can't afford it.' Is it not hard to sit at home and see some one else make the coveted trip, some one else received the excepted gift, some one else receive the longed for letter! Are not these disappointments hard to endure? Try them and see. In our commonplace lives we need commonplace joy. Oh, I cannot express in the poor words of my vocabulary the heartaches, the temptations, the longings, the sadness or doing without, that go to make up so much of life for you and me. But overhead is the blue sky. The song is there. The music is there. The poem is there, and with uplifted gaze we rediscover that which we had torgetten, and the cook, the seamstress, the teacher, the. worker that is our human shape, turn again to the place God meant us to fill, and life for us flows on again. Who can fathom the dephts of life of this little tender and petient sewer of long seams? Only another woman may guess at the aggravating little toils and troubles that make up life for her. Smoky stoves, bread that will not rise, needles that break, thread that knots, pots that will not boil, balies that fret ceaselessly, dishes to wash, beds to make, knives to clean, floors to sweep, stockings to darn, and no kind words, no unexpected pleasant events, no outings, no new books, no evenings at the lake, no new gowns. How is a woman to grow beautiful under a life of such petty, ugly, rasping, gnat-like miseries? The finely tempered steel of patience, the hopeful heart, the granite temper-all these uplift the spirit and make its owner levely and happy. The heart of a woman is a crystal with many faucets. You must hold it up to the light and let the sunshine through it to see how pure and beautiful it is,

It will not otherwise be of any benefit, but the reverse; it will only further exhaust it because it has taken a very large amount -Banker-What! you here again already? of fertility from it. I have grown clover for many years, and consider it the most valuable crop for the farmer when it is rightly used, and its right use is to feed it, and by the use of all possible materials to make manure from the feeding, and put this back on the land from which the clover was taken. And in addition to this I have plowed under the year's secongrowth. If farmers would do this the cloyer would gradually enrich the land. New York farmer says: "It is impossi to say too much for clover unless you utte ing low prices. the abominable heresy that it enable farmers to dispense with other fertilizers. No farmer who can raise it can afford to do without it; besides its other offices supplies humus, indispensable but often deficient. George Geddes, a good farmer, was so impressed with its value that he culogized it rather superlatively. But he kept stock, saved and applied his manure. I spent a day with him a little before he died; we rode over his farm, and, though he was quite feeble, he took special pains to show me his stock and pasture lands, and his mill for grinding feed, I am quite sure he made a good deal of manure and used it." If crops improved during some of the past years, every body of observation and experience knows that they improved most where manure was carefully saved and applied.
