OF INTEREST TO FARMERS.

—In medication, as in aught else, prudence should be our guide. Yet thousands cast it to the winds. Every new nostrum finds its patrons, the medical empirics of every time and school, their "pills." Every change in the genus of humbug is rung successfully—for a time at least—notes being furnished by the credulous. In consequence to the thousands of advertised impostures of the day stands Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, now in its third decade of popularity, approved and recommended by physicians, endorsed by the press of many lands, sought and prized by invalids everywhere. It is an ascertained specific for prevent and cure of all diseases chronic indigestion, liver complaint and constipation, checks the growth rheumatism and neuralgia, is a powerful invigorant and useful diuretic. Nervous people benefit by it.

—Items on Tomato Culture.

—In experiments in training tomatoes, conducted last year at the farm of the Michigan Agricultural college, the method that gives greatest satisfaction consisted of a simple rack that was continuous throughout the row. About every six or eight feet a stout stake was driven on either side of the row and fifteen inches from the plant, the stakes were firmly driven standing something over an foot high. A strip of old board was nailed near the top of the posts along either side of the row. Then edgings were tacked across from one side to the other, four about each plant and a foot apart. The plant now found itself growing up between horizontal edgings, and as it began to top the rack held it above the ground. Upon this simple rack the tomatoes needed no tying nor training, and they spread themselves freely to the sunlight. The circulation of the air under the racks was so free that there was no unusual danger from rot. This is decidedly the best rack tried. It was noticed also that the fruit ripened more uniformly here than on the plants which were tied to stakes.

—On the same grounds some observations were made in tomato rot, which makes its first appearance as slight spots of discoloration about the apex of the tomato, gradually extending and becoming darker until the whole top of the fruit is ruined. This disease attacks the fruit at any time after it is a third or a quarter grown. Tomato rot is of fungus origin. Abundant use of stable manure appears to augment the disease.

—Farm Notes.

—Sheep not in the best condition for breeding should be got rid of without delay. Distemper, foot rot and other difficulties in a flock cause too much labor. Only healthy ewes should be retained. All others unless nearly well should be destroyed.

—Among mutton-eaters there is an increasing demand for more lean and less fat, as is the case with Down mutton. And in parts of the world where sheep are raised as much for their meat as their wool this is going to be a leading element in the question of what brand of sheep to raise.

—Fall and winter is the time for accumulating manure, because then stock is mostly at home, or should be penned or housed at night and during inclement weather, and there is plenty of forage for them to consume. Warm dry quarters, good pure water and plenty of forage are the winter essentials for comfort of stock and manufacture of mutton and stall well littered and have plenty of leaves outside in the yards also, so that the animals be not obliged to stand in mud. There are plenty of leaves in the fall and they make excellent bedding and a good absorbent for the liquid excreta. Carry rich earth, forest mould and the like direct to the field. It makes a good top dressing for winter crops.

—Very much depends upon the milking, both in regard to the yield of milk and the quality of the butter or cheese made from it. The formation of the cow's udder is such that the secretion of the milk is helped by good milking, while it is retarded and time lessened by bad milking.

—The farmer should be able to supply himself with fruit the whole year. With so many improved varieties from which to select there should be no obstacle whatever in the way. The small fruits will come in from one to two years after planting, while peaches may be had the third year, with apples and pears later. Grape vines are cheap, and grow on undesirable locations. They are also ornamental and provide shade.

—The practice of allowing weeds to grow up until nearly ready to seed and then cut the down is a waste. The proper mode is to plow them under, as they provide the best kind of ground manure. Many seeds are rich in nitrogen, and become valuable if turned under when in the green and growing condition.

—When the pigs are confined in the summer they can be advantageously used as manure-makers. Everything that can be converted into manure should go into the pig-pens, so as to permit the pigs to work it over and mix all the materials together. They will also at the same time consume much of the material that would otherwise be wasted.

—Salting stock in the fields should be done only when the stock have free access to water. If no water be given other than when the animals are in the barnyard the salt is best given in the trough.

—Mules and horses in the far West frequently die of a peculiar trouble. The cause of it is either a barley becomes fixed in the animal's jaw, encysts, and grows there, assisted by the tartar of the teeth. A calcareous formation of this sort, oval in shape and weighing a pound, was recently taken from the neck of an Oregon horse.

—Cement floors are not rat proof unless pounded glass be mixed with the cement before laying the floor. Ordinary glass slung from glass factories is excellent for the purpose and will cost but little as it is usually thrown away as refuse.

—A hundred acres of land half tilled are done only when the stock have free access to water. If no water be given other than when the animals are in the barnyard the salt is best given in the trough.
