Hints for the Orchard.

The frequent damage to orchard trees b nice and rabbits and also by sheep thoughtlessly turned into orchards to consume the weeds which should have been turned un der or to eat down spreuts which should never have been permitted to grow may be prevented very easily. As the damagonce done cannot be repaired, it is of the Wm. Badam's Microbe Killer, Still Arch St. greatest importance that the trees, especialthe young ones, should be protected a once. Fifty young trees planted a year age by the writer were wrapped in old newspaper, one paper to each tree, around the atem, and tied by three strings, ene at each end of the paper and one in the middle. Not one tree has been damaged, and now that the wrapping is renewed the bark of the stems appears bright, smooth and sound, and perfectly healthful. The white paper is safe, as it does not absorb heat as tarred paper does, and the abserption is apt to be injurious by the killing of the bark when a cold night follows a warm

A medicated wash for orchard trees as a safeguard against injury by vermin and borers is made as follows: A peck of lime is slaked in water sufficient to make a soft paste as for plasterers' use. This is thinned with water and mixed with some fine clay puddled, tresh cow dung, and a few pounds of the strongest smelling superphosphate of lime that can be procured This is painted upon the stem of the tree. It is devoid of the bright whiteness which so much exasperates the too mathetic traveler who notes with scorn the white painted packing box houses, the whitewashed fences and trees, and the whitened border stones on the edges of the roads and paths that are common in some locali ties. It has a dark gray color, much like that of the stems; it is repugnant to all sorts of vermin, and as it is washed down by the rains it carries valuable plant food to the roots, thus being useful without being disagreeable to any person.

Feeding of Cows for Milk.

It is an established fact proved not only by reason but by a great many scintific. tests and practical experience of dalrymen that a mixture of straw with a certain proportion of any rich grain food will produce the same results as the best of hay alone would. Clover hay is the best standard food for milking cows, but when this carnot be readil; procured out stra v, with bian and cornmeal, will be found equallgood. The quantity of bran and meal required to make up for the poorer quality of s raw varies with different cows, as the direction may be better or worse. But for average good cow two pounds of mixed bran an i meal added to five pounds of cut out straw good quality would be equal to five pounds of the best clover hay. This ration might be given three times a day and would be best if the straw is cut up and weited and the meal mixed with it. The manuer of feeding such fodder is to cut the atraw is a cutting machine as fine as possible, to moisten with water, and then mix the meal with it so that the food is all
