MARVELOUS DISCOVERY.

HER LITTLE SISTER.

"Lizzie has gone again," said Mrs. Crest. "Lizzie's no sort of use to me of late. I don't know what's come to the child, but she does not to me as if she was bewitched."

Frances Crest set down the blue rimmed plate she was wiping with a coarse homespun towel.
"Where is she, mother?" said she. "Out in the woods, I suppose. It's where she always goes." "Mother, you must remember that Lizzie is young. Don't be hard upon her!" pleaded Frances.

Mrs. Crest was Farmer Obed Crest's second wife, and Frances, the tall, pale girl with the somber brown eyes and the oval, colorless face, was the good woman's stepdaughter, while pretty 18-year-old Lizzie was her own and "But for all that," said Mrs. Crest, " same to me as my own child! 'Hard upon her!" she repeated queru

"Oh, Frances, you don't really mean

"Yes, I do," bravely uttered Frances. "But mother won't consent." "I will see to that,"

And Lizzie is very lovely. I can't blame any man for wanting to make her his wife I shall go to Albany, all the same, and tell them not to mind me. You know (with rather a forced smile), "people al ways said I was cut out for an old maid And—and—we three can be very happy here at home all our lives, can't we?"

And here poor Frances broke down nd cried bitterly.
"Don't mind me," said she. "I shall o quite used to it after a while." It was a brilliant January afternoonthe ground covered with snow, the sun shining with Arctic splendor, and all the streets musical with the joyous chime of sleigh bells-when Frances Crest arrived at Mrs. Rigney's house in Albany. "Why - Francie - Crest," ejaculated the good lady, "is this you?" "I came to surprise Lizzie, Aunt Jo ie," said the traveler, smiling faintly. "Well, it will be a surprise," said Mrs. Rigney. "Go right up, dear. She's in he parlor with"

"With Capt. Ellsworth?" "How on earth did you know?" cried the comfortable ciderly lady. "Has she written to you?"

"No, not a word," Frances answered.
'But I know it all, nevertheless." She went on and knocked at the par-"Come in!" called Lizzie's sweet soprano voice; and, with a sudden quickning of her heart, she obeyed. Was that little Lizzie standing by the ire, one dainty, slippered foot on the fender, her gleaming silken gown held up by a slim white hand, while her exmisite profile was outlined against the uby velvet of the lambrequin?

She looked more like a princessfairy queen. In this atmosphere of change and happiness she had fairly lossomed out like a rose in mid June. And that tall figure in the shadow be "Frances! Dear, dear Frances!" In a second Lizzie was in her arms. "You got my letter, love-the letter I wrote to you yesterday-the letter that "I have received no letter, Lizzie. I left home early this morning. Butwhere is Capt. Ellsworth?" "Here-right here before your eyes. Come here, Clarence, and let me introduce you to your new sister, for we are engaged, Frances, Clarence and I. That is my mysterious secret."

The tall figure advanced with a military sort of salute. It was not Stephen at all, but a taller, younger, less impressive looking man. Frances bowed in a bewildered way. "But Stephen, where is Stephen?" she

"Gone down to Woodfield, Francie, after you. Because he says he means there shall be a double wedding if there's to be a single one, and he declares he won't wait any longer for you to make up your mind. And how puzzled he will be, to be sure, when he finds the bird has flown! Are you very much surprised, Frances? But, you see, Clarence is in he regular army; not a mere militia captain like Stephen. He is stationed in Florida, and he was spending his leave of absence with his cousins here in Albany; and so, of course, I couldn't help getting acquainted with him, because Stephen came here every day to talk about you, and Clarence always came with him. And-Yes, Clarence; go away now and get the flowers for the Druggists, 25c., 50c., and $1.00. evening reception at Miss Bird's, for I've got so much to say to my sister.' She dismissed her handsome lover with the nonchalance of a queen, and then showered caresses anew on Frances "Isn't he splendid, darling?" she cried. "And only think, I owe it all to you; for if it hadn't been for your sending me here, I never should have met him at all. And we'll telegraph to Stephen at once, and you will consent to be married at the same time with me-won't you, "Yes," said Frances, her eyes brimming over with blissful tears, "I will!"
