BROADBRIM'S N. Y. LETTER.

she had a bappy home and a loying lausband, but the husband took to drink and aquandered his money, so it is said, and eventually they were reduced to want. Then sickness came, and the husband drifted into the hospital, leaving the poor wife to fight the battle of like alone. No person need starve in New York who knows the city and its institutions; but how many know them? how many know where to apply or what to do? To a stranger, I know nothing more desperately beginned to the person to be in a great city without more are thousands taken in by this battle of stranger, I know nothing more desperately beginned to go into the house when it raims could see through such a bald grand as this, and set to judge by his mail it received at the Brooklyn post office this week, there are thousands taken in by this bald end transparent fraud.

I am sorr to say it, but such fools deserve to be fleeced. It is nanecessary to any that there is no Post-Tribune published to be in a great city without money or friends. Each of the subscription was only thirty cents, and the subscription was only thirty cents, there was twenty cents clear profits. Now, we went there was twenty cents clear profit. Reduced to the direct poverty. Mrs. Henderson refused to beg; her husband had at one time been a book agent, and she tried to earn enough to buy bread at that. She applied for work da after day and falled; she answered advertisements for housekeepers only to find that they were inserted by wretches whose home should be in the Penitentiary. Wherever she went she met insult or refusal, till a couple of days before she ended her sorrowful life. The rain came pouring down as she sallied out to sell a few pamphlets her husband had left her. The cold winds howled through the streets, and with her feet wet, and herself drenched to the skin, she went from door to door. Not a morsel of food had crossed her lips for nearly a day and a half, and as night fell she came back to lier cheerless garret under the cayes, and sat down chilled to the bone, to think upon her misery, and to speculate, perchance, if there was anything in the great hereafter bitterer or more sorrowful than that she was suffering our level best; ahead, beside and twhind as were all sorts of leans from a under the cayes, and sat down chilled to the skin, she went from door to door. Out of the world?"

Who can read this account without a thrill of horror? Merciful God! is it possible that here in a city w! ich rates its wealth at the usands of millions, whose stores are trained with abundance, whose stores are trained with abundance, whose stores are trained with the earth's richest gifts, and whose hank vaults are bursting with silver and gold, that the bumblest creature that God ever made should perish for want of food. Two days before, the telegraph informed that Cornelius Vanderbilt had paid One Hundred Thirty-three Thousand dollars more for and now she claims his partner; should the privilege of landing it on our shores, she fall in getting nim perhaps some one else will do as well. A I the parties are yet on to Mrs. Henderson, but she had it finally, Herr Most, the Anarchist, of dwarf of the paper tells. The strugg e that soiled bit of paper tells. The strugg e prospect of the penitentiary. We have had no winter set, I am writing by an open window, with the air as balms as June obtained all the comforts that Fasth are obtained all the comforts that Earth can of business give, by bartering for them her hope of Heaven. Everything had drifted away from her but her good name, and she carried that spotless with her into the presence of her Maker, trusting to the mercy of him who hath said "Come unto me all we that are weary and heavy taden, and 1 will give you rest." How did this occur? you ask. I don't know. For while she was starving to death, there were thousands in this city looking for just such cases, who would have given her food and shelter and employment and have tided her over the evil time. New York is a great city; but it is neither uncharitable or heartless. Let a case of worthy distress become knewn, and on the instant, hundreds are ready to give immediate aid. For cases like Mrs. Henderson's it seems impossible to make adequate provision; their extremity ls not known till the catastrophe comes, and then they have passed all human aid. It is mournful, it is shocking. What can be done to help the genteel poor? All can be saved; how can we reach them? Something must be done-but how?

But while worthy poverty starves and perishes, bold faced crime thrives and flourishes, and its high priests go ciad in purple and linen. Before me lies a paper called "Cupid," published in this city, the ostensible object of which is to procure husbands and wives for those who desire to get married. This paper is circulated through the country towns and villages throughout the United States, and ruin follows in its track. In every town and village are plenty of male and temale fools. young and old. In this delectable paper are advertisements for husbands and wives. Just suppore a case. Here is such as advertisement, of a young and handsome bachelor, age 30, health good, connections of the best, his family is one of the most aristocratic in the State in which he lives, his income is five thousand dollars per year. He wishes an affectionate woman for his wife, who has an income equal to his own. He proposes to take a trip to Europe immediately after marriage, etc. Now, does any sane girl suppose that a man of that discription would have to go hunting about shabby matrimonial agencies for a wite? Why, the girls where he lived would almost break their makes trying to catch him. Tet there are thousands of foolish young girls—jes, and foolish old girls and widows that will jump at such a hint. There are thousands of girls and women in the country who have bappy women in the country who have happy homes and all that a reasonable heart or Oct 15-67-1v head could desire, but they want to shine in the city; half of their time is spent in randing the trashy novels of the day; she longs for the day when some foreign nobles do all kinds of man in diaguise, who never disclosed his HAULING OF FREIGHT, EXPRESS Lientity till he had won her love, will come that way and carry her to his castle on the banks of the Bhine or the Lake of Como. On reasonable forms. Uniters due it Sweeny's banks of the Bhine or the Lake of Como. Corine Store or at my residen cell rINE it. All such are legitimate game for those was Faterange solution.

sed as Second-Class Matter at the Le- matrixonial agencies. Once in their tolls you never get out. Put your name on their books and they have you completely in their power—for what girl, man or woman would like to have it known in the town where they live that they had been fishing about a disreputable New York agency for a husband or a wild? I can only say that the girl who attempts to fool with any matrimonial agency, or too with any matrimonial agency, or the Year Ending December of the trip with her syes open.

"Post-Tribune," the most influential Republican paper in the city of Brookiny, had Bitterer than the cry that went out of Ramah was the wall of poor, destine, starving, forsaken Mrs. Henderson, as she leaped from the roof of a four-story building on Second Avenue and dashed her desperate brains out on the pavement. A few almost illegible lines, on a bit of soiled and crumpled paper, tells her pitiful story—a story so harrowing and sorrowful, that the heart aches and the tears well into the eyes as you ponder over it. Once she had a happy home and a loying hus.

thing in the great hereafter bitterer or more sorrowful than that she was suffering behind as were all sorts of teams from a Dutch grocer's wagon to Bonner's rattlers. I turned my head as I heard the crack of a crumpled paper and told the pitiful stors of her struggle, then catching up a knife by with two stylish gentlemen in a light road trotting buggs. In a minute they of her struggle, then catching up a knife ahe drew it across her throat and opened the veins in her wrist. But death was slow in coming, so she climed out of her attic window to the roof. One last loos —one desperate plunge—and all was over.
