and wieter in all that gold can bay. But gold nor silver nor precious stones can keep away the messenger of death; for see the door knob and the bell of yonder palace are covered with solemn crape; crapmingled with white, emblems of hope and despair. Enter the palace gate, around or every side gold has been scattered wit lavish hand. Pictures by the fluest mass ers hang on the wails; rare brices brac fills every nook and corner; the tread fall-noiselessly on the rich Wiltons that cover the floor, rivaling the exquisite frescos the look down on them from the ceilings above In the centre of the grand parlor heaper placed among the number. If he had a large family he took good care of them, and it was said that his daughter Alice was the favorite of them all. Be that as it may, he lavished mone on her and her mother, and from the day of her birth to the hour of her death she never knew a want that money could gratify. In her young girlhood she married an old man named Lagroye; her wedded his was short. She soon separated from her husband, and finally drifted to America.

She had been reared on the continent of Europe, most of her early life in Paris. Here, with great wealth and nothing to do, time bung heavy on her hands. The theatre was her great delight and the stage her bean ideal of life. Acting became a craze with her, and at last she formed a company of her own and became a strolling player. Thousands of dollars were sunk in the venture, criticisms harsh and bilistering falled to discourage her. Mrs. Langtry had succeeded, Mary Anderson had been received b) royalty, even Mrs. James Brown Potter, while not a pronounced success, was far from a dismal failure; and why should she not carve name and fame when so many had achieved success? In the course of her travels she met the popular actor Frank Bangs and large. Price 50 sents. Solid at extra charge, Price 50 sents. Solid at extra charge, Price 50 sents. Solid at extra charge, Price 50 sents. Solid at success? In the course of her travels she met the popular actor Frank Bangs and fell desperately in love with him. At this time Mr. Bangs was over fifty years and blase; he had been on the stage for many years and the romance of acting had all been knocked out of him for a quarter of a century. He had run through the who e list of stage lovers, Claude Melnotte, Ro-meo, and Armand Duval is Camilla. mee, and Armand Dival in Camilia. Loye-making to him was simply a matter of business, into which no more feeling entered than if he had been a wooden Indian. But Agnes Leonard, as she called herself, had seen him only from the from of the house, and to her he was Romeo, Claude Meinott, and Armand Duval, all called his one. rolled into one. One afternoon about five years ago or. Bangs and Miss Leonard appeared at the house of the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher and the twain were made one. That afternoon they started for Washington, where she expected to meet all the great lights of the stage. Booth all the great lights of the stage, Booth, Jefferson, Billy Florence, Larry Barrett, Jananscheck, Mary Anderson and Modjeski, The goal of her life's ambition was reached, she had a romantic lover for a husband, and the sings and queeus of the stage were to need and great her on count stage were to meet and groot her on equal terms. On the way to Washington it was alleged that the newly married bridegoom paid more attention to his little dog Toby than he did to his bride. In point of fact,

Toby had been his constant companion for years, and he would not ave parted with him for all the women in the world.
Arrived in Washington, there were no great actors there to greet her; and her husband, instead of a romantic lover, was a blase old man, as cold as an iceberg.

She was sick at heart, the hopes of her life were shaftly ed, her dream was dust and ashes. The next afternoon she took the train for her Brooklyn home, and she never saw her husband after Divorce

On Tuesday I heard that Red Jim Mc-Dermott had arrived in town from Europe, and that consequently there was quite a stir in Fenian circles. The Clam-na-Gael had set a price upon Jim's head, for he was supported to be the spy of the English Government, whose evidence sent several good Fenians and Clam-na-tracks to the Bank Street, Leh gitton, Pa.

A few years after the war Mr. Mc-Dermout figured as an active politician in the city of Brooklyn, and was remarkable for his hatred of the English Government. The very name of the Sassenach was polson to him, and he had several plans for blowing up Windsor Palace, the Parliament Houses, Scotland Yard. Wales, and the Quees he was going to finish himself, while he planned revolts in Ireland, Canada, India and Australia which were sure to rend the British Empire in pieces. He was known as "Red Jim" partially on account of his red head, but more particularly on account his gory record, for every day he waded up to his hout tops in British blood. Red Jim never worked, but somehow he always appeared to be well fixed for each. In an uptown hotel in a small room not over provided with comforts, lay a man considerably past middle life wasted and carewont; his features were sharp and pluched with suffering; for his struggies with death had been a long one, but at last he had won at heavy cost. He had been handsome and even now, worn with disease, the cast of his face and the mould of his head, told at a once that he was considerably more than a commonplate man the was an actor eminent in his day, whose dramastic achievements had won him high distinction in his profession, and for years he had stood in the front rank, applanded by men and adored by women, who find on the stage a realization of their dreams; dreams born in the provalent inersiture of the times; dreams never to be realized this side of the golden gates.

Back about two miles from the terminus of the great Brooklyn Bridge, is a quarter known as The Hill. Dr. Talmage's new church will stand in a part of its most fashionable quarter. This has been a red-letter week for New York. Monday the brains of New York in ried out to install Seth Low as President of Columbia College. She kept the coatly dresses which she had prepared for the stage with n't her stage jewels in a large room; they had cost her over a hundred thousand dollars, and were the objects of her adoration to the last. So ends a stormy and an unhappy life. With all of his kindness the memory of her father was anything but pleasant to her, for there was a stamp of ilegitimacy about all of Singer's later children, and that thought weighed on her like a mountain. But the end came at last, and the hard battle-of life is ended. She died at thirty-eight worth a half a million, leaving an only Saturday, March 8, 1890.
