THE ROLLING MILL.

At a public meeting held in Gabel's Hall some evenings ago, for the purpose of considering the much-talked-of rolling mill question, the following gentlemen were appointed a committee to solicit subscribers to the capital stock of the concern in the sum of $75,000: J. L. Gabel, J. K. Kutz, W. E. Ash, Samuel S. Kutz, John Seabolt, J. H. Penner, B. K. Calkin, I. S. Koch and John T. Semmel. The committee are now at work and meeting with a fair degree of success, while at the same time they are encountering the difficulties usually presented by slow-going people who imagine that we don't need this or that because it wasn't so a half century ago. That's just what keeps us in the old rut that leads nowhere in the onward march of enterprise. We must be up and doing; all along the line of the great Lehigh Valley other towns are booming; industries are going up and prosperity smiles joyously. This is Lehigh's grand opportunity, and there is enough money tied up in this place to take advantage of it, if the holders will awaken from the lethargic sleep of unconcern and go into the work with sleeves rolled up and a determined energy to meet all obstacles. The victoriously foolish argument that the proposed enterprise won't pay is not worth answering. A few more grown specimens of slow life people say, "Well, look at the mill Weissport had, it never paid a dividend, and ruined some of the stockholders." Well, so would the proposed mill if it were to run on the same principle, in fact, it would ruin nine-tenths of the mills in the country, but it won't be run that way. The man at the head of the concern is a practical iron maker with life-long experience; the mill will be constructed and have the latest and best machinery and all the improved conveniences for turning out a product unequaled in the Valley, in fact, the difference between the mill in Lehigh and the mill John Hopkins will erect and run is so great that there is no parallel. It will employ 175 to 200 men and pay weekly wages to the amount of $1000 to $1200. Can't the business men see the benefit of this? Can't the property holders see with half an eye that it is to their advantage to encourage the enterprise? Can't every citizen of this town understand that it is to the advantage of all to have an industry of the kind proposed located in our midst? One man has been found with conception clear enough and a sufficiency of enterprise (all praise to him, would that we had more of his kind), to donate free of price a site for the mill; all that is now needed is men with backbone to put their names in the concern and make it a success. Will you do it? We'll see.

Says the Harleton Plain Speaker of last Monday in regard to a well-known and popular Republican politician: "George M. Davis, a former resident of Harleton, but now a permanent fixture of Lansford, was in town last week. He is looking well and doing well, two things that his many friends here will be glad to know he takes as much interest in politics as ever, and every now and then our Carbon exchanges bear us out in this statement. He is a good worker and should have been rewarded by his party long ago. An opportunity was presented a year ago upon the death of Associate Judge Leonard, but the kid glove element in the Republican party named another to the governor and Mr. Davis was ignored, although he had been the candidate at the preceding election against Judge Leonard and was beaten by a few votes only. Last fall S. B. Price had a walk-over for the office and had things gone right in the Republican camp Davis would have been appointed by the governor, nominated again by his party to succeed himself, and in that event the campaign would have been very interesting indeed, for neither party have better workers than the gentleman named."

Census enumerators will be paid as follows: For every living person, two cents; for every death, two cents; for every five, twenty-five cents; for every factory, thirty cents; for every veteran or veteran's widow, five cents. In special cases an enumerator may be paid by the day, not to exceed $5. The cost of taking the census in 1880 was $8,000,000, and the next one is estimated at fifteen millions larger than in 1880. The work of enumerating will be done during the month of June next.

BROADBRIM'S N. Y. LETTER

Almost through the center of Manhattan Island runs one of its greatest arteries known as the Third Avenue, through which the life current of our city life ebbs and flows, night and day. The tide rises higher and ebbs lower at certain hours of the twenty-four, but at certain points and quiet never reign for a moment.

On Twentieth street, a few steps from this busy thoroughfare, is a long rambling building of dingy red brick, known as "The Post-Graduate Medical School and Hospital," and while it is claimed by those having its charge and direction, that it is ample for its present practical needs, it is no such building as New York or indeed the entire country, owes to an institution doing such a magnificent and philanthropic work. The object of the Post-Graduate School, is primarily, the higher education of physicians and surgeons, and incidentally, the treatment of disease and accidental misfortune among the poor. In one characteristic feature it is entirely different from any institution of medical instruction that I ever saw before. There is an entire absence of the roystering medical student, whose practical jokes with a cadaver were of more consequence than his studies, and whose highest ambition seemed to be, to get back to his native town with M. D. tucked in his case, no matter how little deserved, or how unworthily obtained.

serious air, which incessantly impresses the visitor the moment he puts his foot inside the door; no room for levity or light jesting here; for the subjects constantly under consideration are life and death, the gravest and most important to men. The Post-Graduate School has an American side, that touches a natural pride. The work of its faculty has made it a name necessary for the American student, who needs scientific instruction in the higher branches of his profession, to go to Paris, Vienna, London or Berlin. Attached to this school is a corps of daring investigators who shrink from no problem, however abstruse or dangerous; surgeons who perpetrate the fame of Valentine Mott, James Wood and Dr. Carochan, chemists worthy to stand beside Michael Faraday or Gregor Lussac, pathologists who are lifting the chaff from the wheat in its startling philosophy of Pasteur, and who have thousands of preparations of bacteria which are supposed to be at the foundation of every mortal disease.

But while the primary work of the Post-Graduate School is the higher education of the Physician, the secondary feature is of the most absorbing interest to humanity. Here every day in the week multitudes of the poor, the blind, the lame and the halt, are treated without money and without price. The medical skill that the king of kings could not have commanded a century ago. The whole tendency of the age is to the subdivision of knowledge, and this is fully realized by the Faculty of the Post-Graduate School. It seems to have impressed itself upon them, that man as a whole, "was a subject too stupendous to be considered by a single mind; hence they have made single forms of disease the study of a life. One devotes himself to diseases of the eye and ear, and finds the field before him ample for a life's investigation; another takes study of the brain; still another the heart and lungs; some, disease of the nerves, and so on, to every subdivision of this mortal frame. Surgical operations are performed here every day in the year, from which even the ablest surgeons of a half century ago, would have shrunk appalled, and thousands of cases are successfully treated, that less than a quarter of a century ago, were considered physical impossibilities.

Twenty thousand cases covering almost every ill that humanity is heir to have passed under their treatment, or at least have been subject to their visitation and cure. In New York and Brooklyn are over two millions of people, and in the towns and cities which immediately surround them fully a million more. In this vast field it is to be found every form of human disease, every possible contingency of accident, every probability of human suffering that has occurred or can occur upon the earth. But we are not dependent on our local populations alone; New York is getting to be the most cosmopolitan city in the world, but our cosmopolitanism is frequently purchased at heavy cost in the importation of fatal and contagious diseases, from which our country heretofore has been exempt. And right here comes in the mission of the Post-Graduate Medical School. Every man of its faculty and graduates stands sentinel at our city gates watching the approach of foes from without or enemies from within; no danger of death appals them, and each one would think his life richly paid for it, by its sacrifice, he could discover a remedy for some fatal disease, which has heretofore eluded the ingenuity of man.

In the space allotted to these letters it is impossible to give even a brief synopsis of the different departments for the alleviation of human suffering and pain, but I have a heart of stone who could go through the babies' and children's wards and not feel his pulse quicken and his eyes grow moist as he passes among the beds of these little suffering waifs. Dying around them like angels of mercy are the trained nurses, sweet-faced gentle mannered women, most of whom have never known the joys and sorrows of maternity. No mother, clasping to her breast for the first time her first-born, ever treated it more tenderly and lovingly than these sweet nurses do these heirs of infant suffering.

One of the brightest and happiest features of this institution is the school of trained nurses. The old-time doctor's aversion to women in the sick room exists no longer. She is his skillful assistant and intelligent aid, in every portion of his labor carrying out his orders with the utmost fidelity and exactness. Nothing seems to disturb them; they seem to carry a blessed serenity and peace in the atmosphere around them. Yet in the most trying operations, where men often falter and weaken, they attend the surgeon's directions with a command of nerve like that which held the Christian martyr unflinching at the stake.

Marvellous, indeed, are the cures of malformation among children, which are successfully treated here. No matter how deformed the infant or child, if the children are only brought in time, Dr. Phillips will undertake their cure; and while he may not be absolutely able to give them new limbs or a new body, he will put the old in such a good state of repair that they shall be almost equal to new.

Another wonderful department is that devoted to curvatures of the spine. Here a frayed work of light material is put completely around the body of the patient, and then by an ingenious mechanical appliance, the spinal column is straightened and strengthened till the curvature is reduced and an entire cure is effected. But why go on? No part of the human organism is neglected. Every department has a skilled specialist for the treatment of the eye, the ear, the nose, the throat, the lungs, the heart, the nerves, and he cannot be omitted in the list of the post-graduate school. Here there is the grand opportunity for charity to exercise its benevolence. Two hundred dollars donated to the school will secure a bed for a year to the suffering and needy, with every comfort and attendance that science and humanity can give. God alone knows how many cases of suffering and sorrow that two hundred dollars may assist! It costs about five thousand dollars to convert a Jew in Palestine, and when you have him converted he makes but an indifferent Christian. Our permanent converts in Hindostan average two thousand dollars a head. A hundred years of Christian endeavor and the outlay of many millions of dollars, have made no sensible impression on Africa, where the missionary efforts of Stanley and Emin Pasha have been marked by a trail of blood. For the sake of our common humanity, then, let the Post-Graduate School and Hospital of New York be placed in a financial position where the area of its usefulness may be increased a hundredfold, and that a band of missionaries may go out from it carrying the Gospel of Light and Hope to the farthest ends of the earth.

To do this money is needed, and the more
