Nature in Convulsion

Is terrific. Volcanic eruptions, cyclones, earthquakes are awfully and tremendously picturesque, but scarcely desirable to emulate in action and effect by the administration of remedies which produce convulsion and agony in the abnormal function of the human frame. Such is the effect of the old fashioned violent purgatives happily falling more and more into disuse, and of which Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the wholesome, pleasant and far more effective succedaneum. They weakened the intestines—the Bitters invigorates them. They left the bowels inactive, because incapacitated by causing feebleness. The Bitters, on the contrary, and because it enables, not forces, them to act—a vast and fortunate difference—perpetuates their activity and regularity. The liver is beneficially stimulated, as the kidneys also are, by this medicine, which easily conquers, also, malaria, nervousness and rheumatism.

IF YOU COULD COME.

If you could come to me as I recall
Your face, and I could feel upon my brow
The warm breath of those lips, so silent now—
Could hear some word from them in music fall,
Thrilling the stillness in my life with all
The old time sweetness! if I could but hear,
When the sun sinks behind the western wall
And twilight shades the weeping atmosphere,
A rustle in the roses at the gate,
And looking, I should see you standing there—
My lonely life would not be desolate,
For this would comfort all my soul's despair.
I know thy life is lovelier—God knows best,
But still the dove mourns o'er its empty nest.

—F. L. Stanton in Tribune of Rome.

IN A DILEMMA.

Mark Ramsey and Job Trotter were often seen at the house of old Squire Filpot. These visits were not due to any regard Mark and Job may have had for the squire, but were clearly traceable to the love which they bore his daughter Judy. The two young men were so much alike physically that they might have been taken for twins. They were tall, strong and well built; they were black eyed and long haired, sunburned and hardened by exposure to all sorts of hardships. The resemblance even extended to mental peculiarities. Mark did not know long division from short comings; neither did Job. Mark, given the freest exercise of his arm, could not with a charred chunk have written his name on the gable end of the barn; neither could Job. Being so much alike both physically and mentally, it was small wonder that they loved Judy, who, by the way, was the handsomest girl in the neighborhood.

She was more than merely handsome; she was bright, quick to learn, and, flattering gossip declared, could knit a pair of yarn socks or snatch the feathers off a chicken as quickly and as effectually as any girl in the community, regardless of educational advantages. Judy loved Mark and Job, but she could not decide which one she preferred. This inability gave her great concern, and often at night, while patching her father's brown jeans, or at evening when crouched in the slowly darkening gold of a dying day, milking the muly cow, she would shut her eyes, bring up the faces of her two lovers, and attempt to force herself into a decision, but in vain, for when the gold of evening had darkened into the charcoal of night, when old muly stood patiently with one foot in the pail of milk, Judy's love remained in equal division.

Old Filpot liked the boys, but, to have saved his life, he could not have told which one was his favorite. He was willing she should marry one of them, it made no difference which, and he secretly wished that one of them, still no matter which, would die, so that the remaining one could make his daughter happy.

Neither one of the young men was ever able to see the girl alone, for they kept so close a watch upon each other's movements that one making his appearance at the squire's house, was sure to be followed immediately by the other.

One morning, just as the squire and Judy had arisen from the breakfast table, voices in the sitting room announced to well accustomed ears the arrival of the lovers. The old man and his daughter went in, and, following a long and worn habit, cordially shook hands with the visitors and bade them feel perfectly at home.

"We have come," said Mark, "to see if we can't sorter make some arrangements."

"That's what we have," Job put in.

"I want Judy," Mark added.

"So do I," said Job.

"I love her powerful," Mark observed.

"I love her just about the same," Job declared.

"Gentlemen," said the squire, perplexedly stroking his whiskers, "I don't see how we are going to manage this affair. Judy, don't you, arter all, love one just a little better than you do the other?"

"I believe I do, pap," she answered.

"Thar, we are 'gittin' at it. Now, which one is it?"

"That's what I kain't tell, pap."

"Thar it goes again, an' we are just as fur off as ever. Mark, ain't you got nothin' to suggest?"

"Don't believe I have. Job mout have."

"No, I hain't, lessen it is that she marry me an' be done with it."

"Yas, and I reckon I can make sich a suggestion in favor of myse'f," Mark replied, and then half musingly added: "I do wish this thing was over with, fur I am behind with my crap an' my farm's runnin' down, for I have to watch Job so close that"——

"Jest the same with me," Job broke in.

"Wall, now," said the old squire, "suthin has got to be did, and did at once, fur I'm tired of this here feverish condition, as the feller says. I have hearn my gran'daddy talk about cases like this that took place in the old times, and they never failed to git at a settlement somehow ruther. It mout have been by a match of some sort—foot race, rasslin', or shootin'. I don't know exactly how, but near as I can ricolleck the way gran'daddy told it they allus left it to be decided by some's periority that one hel' over the other."

"I'm mor'n willin'," Job declared.

"What do you say, Judy?"

"Suits me," the girl answered.

"All right," said the old man. "We ken now begin to see our way c'lar; shall it be rasslin'?"

They agreed that it should be wrestling, and going out into the yard, gave themselves up to the contest, but the fatal similarity again asserted itself, for the young men were of equal strength and agility. Then they tried foot racing—they were of equal speed; rifle shooting—they were of equal skill.

"Wall, this do beat, and beat it peart, too, anything I ever seed," the old squire declared. "Spozen you fling up a chip wet or dry?"

"Don't believe I like that idea, fur it only shows luck without s'periority," Mark answered. "How is yo' pulse beatin' on that p'int, Job?"

"Beatin' low down in the shade, fur I don't like the idea."

"Wall," said the old man, "let's go in the house and set down; might as well be restin' while we're thinkin' up suthin' else. Hellos! yander comes Parson Briddle. 'Light, parson, and examine yo' saddle," he added, as the preacher drew up at the gate.

The parson dismounted, and, with the old man, followed the lovers into the house.

"Is it possible," said the preacher, in response to a declaration made by the old squire, "that you cannot, even by the most persuasive appeal to sentiment, settle this extremely eccentric courtship?"

"Can't do it, one way nor tuther," the old man rejoined; and then, quickly turning to the girl, he added, "Judy, I've got an idee."

"What is it, pap?"

"Well, it's this: Parson Briddle, here, has seed a good deal of the world—w'y, you've been 'way down in Robinson county, haven't you, parson?"

"Yes," the parson answered proudly.

"Thar, now," continued the old man, "he has even been 'way down in Robinson county, and is, from the fack that he has seen a good deal of the world, a fair judge of the good pi'nts in man; so now, Judy, air you willin' to leave it to the parson and take the one he picks out?"

"Yes, I'm willin'," the girl answered.

"I'm willin' too," Mark quickly spoke in; "but I want to tell the parson right now of he decides agin me I'll whup him till the folks will think he has been chawed up and spit up by a threshin' machine."

"And as fur me," said Job, "I'm mo'n delighted with the idee, but jest let me say that of he decides agin me I'll wallop him till you'd have to get him together with a hay rake."

"Gentlemen," the parson remarked, "I shall render no decision. I am very well satisfied with my position in life, my circuit is comparatively smooth, and I have a pretty good horse; my salary is lagging, but the sisters have given me ninety-eight linsey shirts, and calico handkerchiefs enough to cover the Rock of Ages; so, taking it all into consideration, I do not care to be food for a dyspeptic thrashing machine, or to clog the teeth of a hay rake."

"Ah, Lawd," sighed the old man, "the end ain't no nearer in sight than it was at fust. Judy, fetch out the jug," he added, as the preacher said something in an undertone. "Now, boys," he continued, when the jug had been brought, "he'p yo'selves."

The boys being mighty partial toward liquor, began to help themselves. The old man took a few pulls and the parson dampened his pucker, but the boys drank recklessly, and after a while they were generously intoxicated.

"Job," said Mark, "I'm the best friend you ever had. You may have Judy."

"Mark," Job responded, "you ain't no better friend to me than I am to you, so you take her."

"Won't do it; you've got to take her."

"No; you've got to."

"Now, we can call on the parson to decide," the old man delightfully exclaimed.

"That's what we can," said Mark. "Parson, you pick out one of us to be the husband of Judy, here, an' I want to say right here that Job's my friend, an' that if you decide agin' him I'll larrup you till you'd run through a sifter."

"Parson, I'm in favor of your makin' a decision," Job declared; "and I am willin' to leave it to your jedgment; but let me tell you right now, parson, if you decide agin' Mark I'll whale you till all that is left of you would ooze through a tow sack."

"Gentlemen," said the preacher, "as I just now remarked, I am not at all displeased with my circuit. I am attached to my ninety-eight linsey shirts, and have become smitten with my calico handkerchiefs. I shall make no decision."

Mark and Job began to stretch themselves on the floor. "Let them sleep," said the old man. "Ho, me," he sighed. "I don't see no way outen this trouble."

"I do," the preacher answered; "step outdoors with me."

When they returned the old man said: "Judy, a decision has been made. You must marry the preacher. Hold on, now don't fly off. He'd do better by you than any one of the boys. Why, jest think, he's got calico handkerchiefs enough to make more bedquilts than you could stuff into a hired man's appetite, and every woman in the community would be"——

"Petrified with envy," the parson suggested.

An expression of delighted resignation shone on the girl's face.

"I will make out the license and do the marryin' myself," said the old man. "O don't be skeered now; I'll fix the boys all right."

Mark awoke, and getting up, aroused Job. "Squire," said Mark, "we got a little too much of your licker. Where did you get it?"

"That preacher that was here sent it to me the other day."

"Wall, he knows what strong licker is; don't he, Job?"

"That's whut he do, Mark," Job added; "I don't know how we air goin' to fix up this love business."

"Neither do I. Where's Judy?"

"It's well you may ask whar she is, when you driv' her off in that way," answered the old man.

"Who driv' her off?" Job exclaimed.

"Why, you and Mark thar, when I begged you not to drink so much, but you didn't pay no attention to me. You swore—both of you—that ef I didn't stand up here and marry Judy to the preacher you'd kill all of us, and I jest had to do it, and then you driv' the bride and groom away, and you ought to be ashamed of yo'selves."

Mark and Job remained silent, sitting over the fire for an hour at least, and then Mark, looking up, said:

"Job, I don't believe there's but one bigger fool than I am."

"Who's that, Mark?"

"Both of us together."

"You are right, Mark. Spozen we saunter on down yander an' fall offen the bluff."—Courier-Journal.

The Rustless Process for Kettles.

The rustless process, which has been until lately an experiment, has now demonstrated that great economy can be used, not only in iron pipes, but in every article where iron is used. Over 2,000,000 kettles have been subjected to this process in Pittsburg. The method is very peculiar. After the article is made it is put into a furnace made in an oval shape, air tight. After the iron has attained almost a white heat, the air that comes through the regenerators and air valves is shut securely off, and the furnace is made air tight. After the air has been shut off the superheater, which is located in the combination chamber at the rear of the furnace, and at right angles from the air valves, is opened, and the furnace is filled with steam and kept in that condition for eight hours. At short intervals a small valve is opened, so as to allow the exodus of steam in the furnace, allowing fresh steam to be put into it. When the articles have been about ten hours in the furnace there has been accomplished the formation of magnetic oxide upon the iron surface. They are then put into an acid well, which is the last treatment.—Exchange.

Anecdote of Rubinstein.

La Starina, a Russian paper, tells how in Rubinstein's earlier days he narrowly escaped being sent to Siberia. He played before the Czar Nicholas in the house of Count Wielhorsky, and on returning home lost his passport. A day or two afterwards he was arrested and brought before Gen. Galahoff, then chief of police, who informed the prisoner that he declined to believe anybody's evidence of his identity, even that of the count. Rubinstein persisted that he was a mere musician, and as one of the subordinate police officers knew something about music the two were sent to try matters over on a dilapidated piano. The test proved satisfactory, and the general, remarking that "the prisoner was apparently a musician," gave him a pumit for three weeks.

The Demand for Cut Glass.

The popularity of cut glass for table decoration is not a fad, but a growing taste, the outcome of its increased beauty in manufacture and design.

When you see a fashionable woman peering over the cut glass counter, inquiring for something in Parisian or Henrietta or discussing the merits of "strawberry," "faa" or "diamond," you may know she is after American glass and prefers a particular cut.

While the inexperienced shopper sees little difference in the similarly shaped and decorated wares, it is yet true that a man in Pennsylvania is rich as a king because he had the wit to take out a patent on one peculiarly cut figure

Koch & Shankweiler, Allentown,

CLOTHIERS,

We have made extensive preparations for the Spring Business in Men's, Boys' and Children's Clothing. Our guaranteed qualities and the lowest prices are making our store the preferred place for those who wish to save time and money.

Mothers', Attention.

Over 3000 Children's Suits now ready. Ages 4 to 15 years. Our experience in Boys and Little Boys Clothing shows that if we can get the attention of the mothers that will crowd our store.

We have pretty and fine material, pretty and novel shapes, and the making a credit to our Little Boys' Clothing Department. We have a complete line of 3-piece Suits, and a fine selection of Jersey and Kilt Suits. We start our Children's Suits from $1.00 up.

Men's Suits.

We are showing this season over 50 Leading Styles. We combine the Best Make with the Lowest Prices.

Everybody in need of clothing, coming to town, is invited to visit our Large Clothing Establishment. We know that the time so spent will be very profitable. Get our prices before buying and you will save money by so doing.

Custom Department.

This department lacks nothing to satisfy the tastes and ideas of the most critical of men.—Our line of Spring Trouserings and Suitings is larger and more select than ever seen before. Everything is in readiness with all the modern facilities to guarantee unsurpassed workmanship, fit and finish. A special feature is the very large assortment of Styles offered at prices that will be found highly attractive.

SPECIAL! The great invention—Patent Shirt Waists. The "Mother's Friend" Waist does away entirely with the sewing on of buttons. It is supplied with an adjustable belt, which is easily taken off when the waist is washed. The buttons are riveted on the belt, consequently cannot be torn off either in wearing, washing or ironing.

Being plain in speech and sincere in our offerings, we recommend goods as they really are and quote you the very lowest price.

Hotel Allen Building, Allentown, Pa., Koch & Shankweiler, Largest Clothing House in Lehigh Valley.

What we Owe the Boys.

Anything new and attractive in Boys' & Youths' Suits you are sure to find by looking over our new large Spring Stock. Confirmation Suits a great specialty, made in the latest styles and of the newest fabrics, such as fine Corkscrew, Wide Wale, Worsteds and neat Mixtures in all grades and at Special Prices.

Spring Overcoats.

This season our Spring Overcoats are of the finest Merchant Tailoring, and force themselves into popular favor on account of the low prices. A coat that does not lack any of the neat and fashionable points for $17.5. A good stylish coat as low as $8.

Gents Furnishings.
