TONSORIAL ODDITIES. BOOTHING INFLUENCE OF A LEFT-

HANDED BARBER.

Woman Barbars and When They are Utilized .- The Team Share and How it Warks A System of Economy for one Barbar.

The man of leisure who thinks he has schausted the pleasures of life and sight for more excitement should not give up antiroly saill he has been shaved by a left-handed barbar. This experience may not be entirely new, for most men have been shaved in some way, but while the tonsorial art is anelent the left-handed application of it is a novelty. There may be left-banded barbers in

New York, but I have never encountered one thace, and I have met but two else where ; one in Salida, Colorado, and the other in St. Augustine, Florida. Both ware excellent barbers. A man who has nover been shaved by a loft-banded burber, and has never beard of one, is interested on the first occasion when he ases him strop his razor. He thinks that this is only a momentary variation for novelty's asks of the familiar rhythmio stropping, and when he sees it continued he expects every moment to see the resor nick the strap, but it doesn't do it. When the artist turns and approaches, with the razor still in his left hand, the man in the chair doesn't know what not to expect, but when the first touch gives assurance of a practiced hand he realizes what it means, and asks, in modified artist says, "Yes, sir," and proceeds to shave him usatly and comfortably, but in the reverse order, beginning whole the right-handed man would leave of and finishing where he would begin. Th laft-handed shave is, throughout, seasoned with the sense of something new ; and it is an experience that makes the man in the chair feel, somehow, when he gets through, that he has taken part in a olni achlevoment. Of course the man in search of novelty has been shaved on steamships and steamboats, and on the cars, perhaps, but if he hasn't been let him take either of the great limited trains botween New York and Chicago and try that. Or if he travels extensively, he may in some small town be shaved by a woman, not in a ladies' barber shop like those that opessionally flouriah for a time in the larger sitiss, but in a quist and comfortable little shop and by the barber's wife, who, her husband being away, shaves the customer is a next and business-like man-ner. If he has never had a team shave then indeed has the man of leisure something worth living for.

It seemed like a piece of luck to find a vacant chair in a barber shop in a booming California town. The outfit of the shop was not costly, but it was sufficient, and the two barbers were choorful and active. The barber lathered my face and rubbed it gently. He put on more isther, until I wondered why he didn't go ahead and shave me. The customer in the next chair had a wiry beard, and it took a long time to shave him. Meanwhile my barber painted my face up and down and crosswise and in diamonds and oircles, and rubbed it in again.

While the shaving partner was stepping to my chair the painting member of the firm was crossing to the other and, drop-ping the brush and taking a bowl and the bay run bottle, he proceeded to complete the work on the first custome
