DAY'S HORSE Sheridan's Courtsons Care. To show the care and interest that General Signidan took in the welfare of his command, and his attention to the Hitle details which few go send efficers would take the trouble to bother themselves with, Mr. Evans made a note of the following: "I was riding along about the middle of the column one day, after we had started from Camp Supply, on the way to Fort Cobb, when a soldier, as I supposed, of the regulars, camo alongside of me and entered into a conversation. I was a mere boy, and that fact perhaps enlisted his sympathics, We chaifed quite a long time, and finally noticing the manner in which my saddle blanket was folded, he suggosted that it would injure my horsethat he would soon have a secre back that might be d flicult to cure under the circumstances we were compelled to meet. I continued to ride with it folded that way, saying rather indifferently that I knew there was a proper way to fold it. He then said that if I would discount be would show me that "proper way." Accordingly, at the kind suggestion, I discounted, he getting off his horse ut the same time, and I stood by and watched him unsaddle my animal, take the blanket and fold t in the regulation manner, then place the saddle back on the horse. Then we mounted and I rode on, arriving at bend-quarters in a short time. There I disovered, to my amazement, that my vhilom groom of an hour before was the eutenant general of the army, the amous General Sherilan. I lad never seen him before we met in this cordial way, and I guess my astonishment was lainly visible on my youthful features. as I gazed with wonder and admiration upon him when I heard the officers gall im General Sheridan, and saw them salute him with the utmost respect-
