The Pennsylvania Railroad Company, after experimenting several years, has decided to abandon all kinds of advertising except through regular newspapers. Experiments have shown that posters, banners, etc., bring smaller returns by far than does newspaper advertising. Sensible.

GENERAL W. T. SHERMAN is dead and his demise unites a nation in gloom. He was a brave, courageous man, honest and faithful to his country, and his death severs the last link in the line of generals great in the history of American wars. Were we to write Sherman's epitaph it would read: "Well done thou good and faithful servant."

This annual report of the Superintendent of the Public Instruction, just published, contains considerable of interest. There are 2,330 school districts in the State, and 22,552 schools of which 11,700 are graded. There are 8,322 male and 16,111 female teachers in the State. The average salary of the male teachers are $30.50 and of the female teachers $20.64. The increase in school districts over 1880 was nine, and of schools 475.

This New York Herald has just had a canvass made of all the Democratic members of the State Legislatures as to their preferences for President. The result, based on 1,515 for Cleveland, 190 for Hill and 270 scattering or doubtful. Of the votes for Hill, 31 were in the Legislature of New York, which the Governor at present owns; 22 were in Missouri, 16 in Ohio and 15 in Illinois. In all the other States the Democratic vote was practically unanimous for Cleveland as the Presidential candidate of the party.

IN SPEAKING OF the Parnell scandal Mr. O'Brien says: "One of the saddest things in this tragic business is that circumstances have rendered it impossible to give organized effect to the overwhelming public longing for a reconciliation, while the field is held by heated partisans who, impelled by motives which I do not question, but who are fatally deceived as to their own and their opponents strength and the consequences of continued discord, have done their worst, by expatriating language, and venting suppositions, scarcely veiled threats, and rumors and intrigues, to make the work of peacemaking impossible."

ADMIRAL DAVID D. PORTER, who has been in falling health for some years, died suddenly at 8:15 a. m. on the 18th inst., at his residence in Washington, D. C., of fatty degeneration of the heart. In the death of Admiral David Dixon Porter the country loses the last of a type of naval commanders who sustained in the civil war the finest traditions of the old navy. Through far from being alone in this record of gallantry the names of Farragut, Foote and Porter have a pre-eminence of their own. Five generations of the family have gone down to the sea in ships, and all have acquitted themselves with bravery. And now, with the death of David Dixon Porter the title of Admiral in the American navy dies, too. Admiral Porter was born in Chester, Pa., on June 8, 1813. And was educated in the Columbian College at Washington.

RAILROAD GORGE
The new pattern of passenger cars recently adopted by the Lehigh Valley Railroad will doubtless be appreciated by the traveling public. They are remarkably handsome and equipped with all the most modern appointments, affording a seating capacity for seventy-two persons. The life of the railroader is in jeopardy constantly, and fully realized, yet hardly an accident occurs that was expected. Men are often blamed for running too great risks. In a measure, perhaps, the charge is true, but certainly, the railroader that takes no risks will not be a railroader, either a correspondent to an exchange. Either fear of inefficiency will drive him out or pure greed. As a rule the management of roads provide all the safeguards for human life possible. Not only is the loss of property a damage, but the loss of life is a serious matter. An exacting public quickly demands investigation and insists on placing the blame where it belongs. Yet with all the care and a full knowledge of constant danger, the mauling or killing of a railroad employee comes like a clap of thunder from a clear sky—unexpected. The strong, robust, happy fellow, facing danger in all kinds of weather, day and night, suddenly crushed, mangled and bleeding—a cripple or corpse. A home desolate, the "bread winner" gone; a family destitute.

The Reading Railroad Company has taken an important step in ordering automatic couplings for more than 5,000 new cars, which will also have all brake appliances. The order calls for 3,000 coal cars, 1,000 gondolas, 1,000 box cars and 50 stock cars. The rolling stock will cost the company $5,000,000, and the extra cost of couplings will amount to $125,000.
