A GOOD SOLDIER RE. The Excellent Record of Moses Rehrlg in the Late War. A Brave Soldier and a

Heroic Sufferer.

For every emergency God provides.
The echo of the first gun shot had scarcely died ere the North rose almost in solid phalanx ready to offer themselves for the preservation of a country that had taken so much to establish. The men who fought the great war of the Revolution left behind a love of country, a purity of patriotism that had been engrafted into the generation that followed and which lives to day in the hearts of every loyal American from Maine to California and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and in all the by-ways that span the space in the curitous route. Thus it was that when the perpetuity of the United States was threatened by the southeran secossionists and an attempt made to establish a government of their own that the North loyal to the teachings of the past, rose in a lower of the past, past lower of the last list season.

Between 11 and 12 o'clock Monday night the boiler of engine 235 exploded while the engine was standing opposite the coal schutes in the Jersey Central yard at Coalport. The explosion occurred without the slightest warning and the engineer, fireman and two brakeman were sent into cternity horribly mangled. They were Albert Tripp, John Brobst, John Gallager and William Smith. william Smith. The engine was one of the old Cock pattern and had been in almost continuous service since 1867. When an Advocate representative visited the seene the following morning there was not much remaining of the explosion to show what awful death work had been done, but enough to show with what terriffle force the fragments of the exploded engine were a scattered. Several telegraph poles were cut as through by a knife, and the wires were scattered in all directions. Large pieces of boiler iron were found several hundred feet away, and trees in the woods on the side of the mountain were torn as if by a tornado. What was intact of the locomotive had been pulled into the round house and there was little of it to show that it was once a powerful piece of machinery. John Gallagher, brakeman, 20 years old, was not on the engine but had gone up from the switch to give the engineer some information concerning the shifting of coal. His head less body was taken out of the river several rods from the shore by Superintendent Twining early Wednesday morning. The body of Alfred Trip, aged 30, who leaves a wife and four children was picked up in fragments as through the trees and shrubbery. Trip had lost a leg by being run over by an engine several years ago. John Brobst, 60 years of age

Engine No. 235, which exploded, has been running night and day for years, and is said to have been in bad shape for some time. It is also stated that engineer Tripp made frequent complaints about its unsafe condition. This is a matter of the greatest concern to the amplement of the mileson and Prof. F. J.
