KING GIACOMO'S BRIDE.

On the steps of a palace quite near the famous Rialio, or Grand Canal, now one of the most notable palaces in all Venice, listlessly stood a and faced, shabby young man, while just overhead a little girl of some dozen years leaned across the gayly gendolns as they plied up and down the beautiful streets of the city. It was the day of Saint Mark's, one of the gayest holidays in Venice. The girl had but just emerged from the convent walls at Padua, and, like a bird let loose, was in her merriest mood. Amused at the unusual solemnity of the brown faced youth, who seemed to be solitary and alone in the midst of such festive cheer, and seeing him the butt of some disagreeable, tensing boys, she threw him a shower of boubons, asking her brother, who stood by, how he thought the lads could so torment a stranger.

"Boys were very ill mannered," he said; but see, slater, he is able to de-fend bimself, for he gives taunt for taunt; so don't distress yourself. He is of age, and is fully capable of parrying

They little thought, as they talked, that this stranger youth was the repre-sentative of a lordly house, a young prince, and no beggar, who had been banished from his father's court at Cyprus-not only that, but persecuted by a cruel mother, and without money or friends, and in deep despondency had wandered to Venice, a very poor place for one who knew nothing of work even in prosperous days, and especially so for a royal prince who would not work!

Goaded to vengeance, after standing at bay for awhile, and maddened by the restless throng of boys, the young man flourished a stiletto over his head, and at length it became fighting in real earnest. In the very heat of the strife the door of the palace opened, and a sweet faced girl peered out defiantly, much surprising his tormentors. "Boys of Venice, shame on you to treat a stranger so! The very fisher lads could show you better manners!"

Taken aback by these sharp words from the daughter of one so august and of such wealth as Marco Conaro, they quickly scattered, perhaps more quickly as they saw coming up the Grand Canal a gorgeous gondola filled with young men who had charge of all this brilliant display.

Prince Giacomo—for this was the name of the young man-as the plazza was speedily cleared, raised his hat to the girl, as if to offer his thanks, seeing for the first time the interest in her face, as well as the sweetness of it, and followed

Time went on. It was but two years before the mother and the old king were gathered to their fathers, and the beg-garly prince became king of Cyprus, then a must desirable possession, and one that Venice courted. Many Venetians owned land there, among them Marco Conaro, the father of the young girl, Catarina.

Her uncle, Andrea, went to inspect her father's land often in his stead, his possessions being so large, and became in new king. Glorying in Venice and her charms, he talked much about them and of Catarina, his pet.

"You should see her. She's the leveliest girl in all Venice," he said. "I can show you her picture, but it doesn't do her justice. Can you realize that she is but 14?"

As the king took it in hand he started back in surprise.
"Why is the face so familiar?" he

"Why is the lace so laminary he asked. "Ah, I have it! I know her—I know that young girl!" He had fallen desperately in love with the picture even before that discovery

"You know her, sire? I think not," answered Andrea, astonished.

"I do—by my honor, I do," said the king. "She is the brave raniden who, in my poverty and loneliness, when, like an imbecile, I was crushed by disaster, de-fended me on the Grand Canal at Venice, for which I owe her lasting gratitude," bowing and smiling at the picture as he spoke, as if he were really addressing the

which was something like this; "I am my own master. I must see Catarina and perchance I shall make her queen."
Full of this matrimonial project, an ambaseador was dispatched to Venice, noliciting an alliance with the great re-sublic, and asking the hand of some high orn maiden for King Giacomo. But seret instructions, you may be sure, were given him whom to choose.

So the courier came to Venice, and it was decided that on a certain day one of the high officials of the republic, the vestments of the grand old doge as he sat in state upon his massive throne, and the gorgeous array of the 72 candidates for the king's choice, all puffed and pow-dered, and standing upon their high heeled shoes, tall and stately, made a grand pleture.

There was but one in that gay amembly who was simply dressed, and completely oblivious to all around her. Very young she was, and very beautiful as well, with her golden hair and queenly bearing. While all the others were antions and expectant she was calm and timeonoccued, as she temembered the poor young man of Saint Mark's Day, contrasting him with the present king hunt-
