THE SWITCHTENDER.

A little white house seemed asleep among the blossoming apple trees. It was early morning, and all was light and freshness. The door opened; a man ap-peared at the threshold, a smile on his face and an expectant look in his eyes. There was a movement behind the trunk of an apple tree. The man's smile grew broader, and from the tree, like a dryad, ushed a charming little flaxen haired girl, who throw herself with a burst of aughter into his arms. "May I take the little one, Celine?" said

"Again!" she said, with a shade of an-"Oh, we share her very fairly," said the man, with the kindest and most pa-ternal smile. "If you knew," he re-sumed, "how quickly the hours pass when she is down there with me." "Don't you think I know, when I find them so long in her absence?"

It was embarrassing. Aimee herself gan to be troubled by this conven and feeling that she could not please both these beings that she loved so much, she was ready to cry. Celine saw it at once /"Take her, Laurence; I would rather have her go than feel badly about it."

"No," said he in his turn, "keep heryou deserve it; you love her best."

The discussion began again, but it was this time a struggle of generosity. At last the husband took his darling in his arms, and a smile reappeared on the child's lips.

One morning, without saying anything to Celine, Laurence took the little girl's hand to lead her away, when her mother suddenly appeared.
"What!" she said. "You would take her without telling me?"

"Don't think that," said Laurence, in some confusion. "We were in fun—we were going to hide behind the trees and ee you look for us.

"Listen, Laurence," she contin Aimee grows more restless and trouble-some every day. It is dangerous to let er go with you."
"What do you mean?" said the man, cold meat, lettuce and prunes or baked

"I mean that I am afraid of your vallroad, with its trains and locomotives."

"You are very foolish."

"Leave her here. I can hardly breathe while my little girl is down there. It is frightful to think of it, but she might get of two or three hours all through the way and be killed,"

"Don't talk so, Celine," "She might run away while you are at the switch, and if you left it to look after her, you would fail in your duty, and might be the cause of a dreadful disast. The young woman did not insist.

"You will come for her at noon." Little by little t'eir terrors faded away. Laurence reasoned with himself.

"No," replied Laurence, "he was in great danger, but he escaped, thanks to standard authority, Mention this his wonderful coolness," Then he is not dead?" said Celine.

"No; and yet the whole train went over him. When Simon saw it was too late to save himself, he laid flat down in the middle of the track, and when the train passed by he got up again safe and sound. I saw him. I asked him how it made him feel. At first, he said, when the engine went over him, he was very warm; after that the time seemed long. That was all. You know Simon is not casily frightened. He is ready to go to work again," added Laurence tranquilly. Some time after that the hours of service were changed and Laurence took the night section. He could no longer think of taking Aimee with him.

One evening, however, a poor woman in the village was taken very ill. The doctor who came wrote a prescription and said to the neighbors he found there:

"These medicines can only be had in the town and you must not wait for The other day a farmer drove through town with a load of apple-butter which | them. Let one of you go to the railway he sold at an unusually cheap price and station, where there is a portable the demand was so great that he could pharmacy, and ask the station master on not dish it out fast enough. Celine lifted the little girl over the fence to her father, who took the precious burden in his arms and returned with her to his box, before which a lamp was burning. Darkness covered the tracks, which crossed in every direction.

It would not take Celine more than 20 minutes to get to the station and back, There are 270 women ordained or licens- the unwary, says an exchange. The The child was in one of her most frolio

"You can't catch me," said she. "Yes, I can." But the little witch evaded Laurence's pursuit, leaving laughter behind her.

"Yee, I don't want you to stay there. The express train is coming. "Oh! I shan't let you catch me. The train less gone by."
"There is another."

Instead of replying the child said:
Run after me, paps, run.

Laurence saw there was nothing to be done but to run after her, and take her out of danger. He rushed toward the place where he heard her voice. It was dark, and Aimee escaped him still. His alarm increased. At any instant the whistle of the oncoming train might be heard, and Laurence redoubled his appeals. His voice was hoarse with fright; the fatal moment approached, and still the child laughed and repeated:
"You can't eatch me."

Now the whistle sounded. The lugubrious call paralyzed the poor man, and he lost his head completely. The train would have two victims if he did not regain his composure. Two victims! It would be a catastrophe with incalculable consequences; for a train was stopping at the station a little way ahead, and if the express was not switched off there must sevitably be a collision. Laurence shool off his torpor.

"Aimee!" he cried in thundering

"Here, papa." And the child continued to give sharp little calls, which mingled in the roar of the approaching engine.

The instinct of duty rather than will urged Laurence toward the switch. He seized the instrument which ought to tur which the train must pass. He looked again. He saw her—he saw her. She was there, standing on the very track the train must take if he altered the switch. If the iron tempest did not take its true course the child was saved. The train would go on to crash against the one at the station. What matter? Aimee would be alive! All this went through his mind like lightning. They would be killed and wounded—twenty families in despair, but Aimce would be safe and ound. There would be an inquest; he would be condemned to prison, dis-honored, ruined! But his daughter, his little Aimee, would live and be happy. Ah! low quickly one can think in such

The stoical soldier at this moment was uppermost, and effaced the father. He pushed, hardly knowing what he did, and the express train crossed

On, on it went, and he could see it passing before the station, going by as if it were happy to escape a danger, and disappearing in the darkness. Duty had been strongest. Stupefled, staggered, speechless, Laurence was rooted to the spot, holding still the cursed handle which had helped him to kill his child. "Now," he said, "it is my turn to die." The other train was about to pass. He stepped forward, crossed his arms, and awaited it. The whistle sounded, the

He could not bear so much joy, and fell fainting be-side his daughter, who, in her turn, screamed with terror.

At this moment Celine arrived. She heard her child's voice, and hastened her steps. Then, becoming impatient, she called:

The child ran to meet her, crying: "Mamma, mamma, I am frightened!" "What is the matter?"
