Two hours had passed by when she woke up again. The baby had not moved. Its legs and arms were cold and rigid, and the eyes were half open. It was dead. She lifted the wee bit of clay and kissed it as though she would give it some of her own life. She called it he yeing, and her tears fell upon the wisps of golden hair.

The sounds of her grief came to the eurs of her alsepting husband. He crawled to his knees and made an obeissance before the shrine. The Joss sticks had burned down to the wood and had gone out. He jumped to his feet with a scry like an animal at the fatal shot, and began to light new sticks. Them, for the first time, he saw the child was gone. He saw it in its mother's arms. He smatched it from her and felt its cold cheek. Like a lump of load he went dows on the bare floor with the baby still in his arms.
