The Chimes in Old Trinity.

There is a delightful mystery about the Trinity chime. It is the oldest is this country, except the Grime of Christ church in Philadelphia. But very little is known of the history of Trinity's older bells. From the inscriptions upon them bells. From the inscriptions upon them it is supposed that the five bells that at first composed the chime were cast in London. One more, it is believed, came from England in 1785, when the second Trinity church was exceted. When the present Trinity church was built in 1845 there were six old bells in the steeple. The largest one was cracked and was
