THE TINMAN.

Above bloom and lime,
Oh, how sweet they smell
Bells o' Lincoln, hear him
Like a silver bell!
Round the barn the swallows,
Loudly twittering, dart;
All things speak of springtime—
See the tinker's cart!
Pans and pails that glitter,
Great broums mounted high,
Big and little dippers
Like shoes in the sky.
Stopping at each farmhouse,
"Is the lady in?
Have you any rags, ma'am?
Do you want sons tin?
Tin or wooden ware, ma'am,
Will you trade with me?"
Oh! a traveling tinman's
Is the life for me!

The Passing Rage For Gilding.

A bottle of gilding in the hand of vogue is more dangerous than the proverbial pot of paint in the hand of a woman. The latter daubs every available useful article within reach in the name of freshness.

But fashion sheets as copiously, and this is the name of high art. We have watched with a shudder prim New England spinet bottomed chairs brought from the attic to be dressed at a cost of imitation gold. We have seen all sorts of incongruous articles, including rolling pins and potato mashers, filling their plebeian forms with aids outward and visible sign of the Keeley cure. And now the depths are literally sounded—fishes nets are dragged from the sea and gilded.

Not that all cheap effects are mean any more than all mean effects are cheap. The gilding only adds to the expense of fish netting, which is really popular with artistic folks "in its natural state" because of its soft gray coloring and its inclination to hang gracefully. It is a charming acquisition to the list of inexpensive draperies.—New York Times.

A Rumor as to Mrs. Evening Dress.

It is once more current in society that the Prince of Wales is endeavoring to modify men's evening dress and that the usual swallowtails are to be replaced by a black or dark colored short coat and also that knee breeches are to be worn.

Meantime a great deal of ridiculous cavilling is made in the case of County Donegal, Ireland, into which the tide rushes with such force as to produce a sound like the booming of a cannon, which can be heard 20 or 30 miles away.

Were the superfluities of a nation valued and made a personal tax or benevolence there would be more almshouses than poor, more schools than scholars and enough to square the government bonds.—Puck.

Too many of us in our eagerness after facts simply for the sake of getting up knowledge neglect the primary means of making our knowledge useful.

It is agreed by medical authorities that the virulence of an epidemic may be increased by the element of fear in unhealthy mind.

Speech Restored.

For five years I suffered with pain and discharge of the throat, hacking cough, frontal headache, weak eyes, &c., at times could not talk above a whisper, lost weight continually, and not able to work. I was treated by the best physicians in the country, but received no relief. After giving up all hopes I was recommended to use a bottle of Mayers' Magnetic Catarrh Cure. After using it for four weeks my adeeah returned. All symptoms of catarrh have disappeared, and "I feel like a different person."

Effect of Faith In Time of Sickness.

The effect of belief or faith, the effect of mind over the matter of the body, is one of the mysterious things in all science. It is unquestionably a fact, demonstrated beyond all dispute by thousands of observed cases. Long before it was admitted to be studied by scientific men it was commonly known, and that, too, among races of little mental development. Who shall say when the first enemy received his enemy to death among the natives of the South Sea Islands? Who can tell when the first Old man "put curses" on him who he defied him? The religious mysteries of vanished nations are full of recorded occurrences that may only be explained by this extraordinary power.—Cyrus Edson, M. D., in North American Review.

Gold and Silver Paint.

"Let me tell you how to buy gold or silver paint," says a lady. "Don't get it mixed or in the little bottles of powder and liquid that come prepared in boxes. Get the gold, silver or bronze powder by the ounce and buy the liquid medium separately, as many ounces at a time as you wish. You know the bottle of liquid never lasts as long as your bronze because it dries away and evaporates so rapidly. In this case you get any amount you wish. Mix a small amount at a time, use it as quickly as you can after it is prepared and always keep your bottle corked."—Philadelphia Times.

A Marvelous Memory.

A memory is a good thing to cultivate. Most people have passably good memories; many have extraordinary ones, and some have none at all. One of the causes of the popularity of the late James G. Blaine was his remarkable memory for names and faces. It is said that Mr. Blaine could recall the faces and names of persons he had met only casually 10 years and more after the first meeting, not having encountered them in the interval.—Harper's Young People.

Snakes on the Isles of Shoals.

The Isles of Shoals, mere rocks standing 10 miles from the New Hampshire coast in a cold sea, are alive with snakes. On a hot day one will see dozens of them running in and out of the boggy places or sunning themselves on the bare ledges. They are nothing to be afraid of, however, for they are of only the variety—the common little green snake that seldom grows to a length of 2 feet.

DECIDEDLY SHARP.

How many remedies there are which merely relieve without uprooting disease. The cabinet with sterling medicines which any sufferer can afford, not only embalms the dignity of the former, but services to emphasize the folly of employing half-way measures when thorough cures are available. A marked instance of this is the case of Mr. Samuel Sand, 63 Potter's Stockade, Towers to Cure of chills and fever and bilious sentiment, and on the other of ordinary complaints, a medicine of this type, by the fullness of its natural constitution in every place, and of the most malignant type, are completely conquered and lose their hold upon the system. They are rarely, if ever, dissolved by the ordinary resources of medicine although their symptoms may unquestionably be mitigated through such means. The same holds good of indigestion, biliousness, kidney complaints, nervousness, and debility. By the Bitters they are cured when remedies fail.

THE GOSPEL OF WORK

EMILE ZOLA'S STIRRING ADVICE TO FRENCH STUDENTS.

Extracts From a Masterly Speech Delivered Before a Body of Young Men in Paris—The Relation Between Science and Happiness Explained.

Emile Zola, the famous novelist, presided at a dinner given by the Students' association of Paris. In the course of the evening he spoke as follows:

Did science ever promise happiness? I do not think so. Science promises truth, and it is questionable if happiness can be made out of facts. To be content with them even for a day one must possess a spacious, an absolute negativeness, a serenity of intelligence possible only to the highest minds. Therefore, despairing cry goes up from suffering humanity. How, it asks, can we live without delusions and illusions? If there is not somewhere a world where justice reigns, where the wicked are punished and the good rewarded, how endure the abominations of human existence? Nature is unjust and cruel. Science ends in the monstrous law of the survival of the strongest. Reasoning thus, recoiling from realities as yet ill explained, they seek a dream, put confidence in the out of sight and hope feastify in the beyond their yearning for fraternity and justice.

This despairing appeal for happiness, rising on every side, moves me infinitely. Already music has responded to it, literature is trying to satisfy the new thirst, and art is changing to show its symptoms. It is the reaction against naturalism, which is, they say, dead and buried. At any rate the movement is undeniable. It is felt in all the manifestations of mind, and unless it is taken into account, studied and explained the outlook for the morrow is hopeless.

I, being an old and rugged positivist, see in all this only a halt in the march ahead. Indeed it is not even that, for our libraries, laboratories, expeditions and schools are not deserted. What reasons me most is the fact that the social ground is unchanged. For a new art to flourish, for a new belief to give humanity a new direction, there must be a new soil for them to germinate and grow in. Ours is still the democratic soil whence the century rose. Faiths are not resuscitated, and only a mythology can be made of a dead religion. The next century will affirm this one. What I will concede is that in literature we brought the horizon too near, and personally I regret having endeavored to limit art to proved veritics.

The new men, by re-extending the horizon, have regained possession of the unknown and the mysterious, and they have done well. Between the truths acquired through science, which are not to be shaken, and the truths to be conquered tomorrow from the unknown, which in their turn will become immovable, there is a land of doubt and inquiry. This land belongs as much to literature as to science. Into it we can go as pioneers, doing the work of precursors and interpreting, according to our talents, its unknown forces. The ideal is only the mechanism. It is well enough to invent solutions for the unknown, but we have no right to rush in question and so deny facts already verified. As science advances the ideal retreats, and it seems to me that this above conquest, though we have the melancholy certitude of never knowing all, gives life its only reason, its only joy.

In these troublous days youth is told to believe, but nobody tells it exactly what to believe. Believe, they say, for the sake of the happiness that comes from believing, and most especially believe in order that you may learn to believe. The advice is not bad in itself. It is certainly a great joy to repose upon the assurance given by any faith, no matter what. The difficulty is that one cannot believe by being willing to do so. Faith is a wind that blows where it listeth, and there only.

In conclusion let me offer you a creed—the creed of work. Young men, work! I am aware that no counsel could be more banal. In every school at the end of every term it is given to every boy, and every boy hears it with indifference. But let me, who have never been anything except a worker, tell you the reward I have gained from the long toil whose effort has filled my life. The world was harsh to me at first. I have known poverty and despair. Later my existence was a battle, and even now the fight goes on and my work is questioned, contradicted, insulted. Through it all my support has been incessant work, regular, daily, for an end never forgotten. How often have I seated myself at my table, tortured by some great pain, physical or moral! And each time, after the first minutes of agony, my task has proved a solace, has given me strength to continue the struggle and await the morrow.

Work is the law of the world—the guide that leads organized matter to its unknown goal. Life has no other reason for being, and each of us is here only to perform his task and disappear. Calm comes to the most tortured if they will accept and complete the task they find under their hands. This, to be sure, is only an empirical way to live an honest and almost tranquil life, but is it nothing to acquire moral health and by solving through work the question of how to secure on earth the greatest happiness this escape from the danger of the dream?

I have always distrusted chimeras. Illusion is bad for a man or a people; it puts an end to effort, it blinds, it is the vanity of the weak. To remain among legends, to contemn realities, to believe that dreaming of strength gives force—we have all seen to what disasters those things lead.

The only strong men are the men who work. Work alone gives courage and faith; it alone is the pacificator and the liberator?

When first taken from the mines, opals are so tender and friable that they may be picked to pieces with the finger nail.

The Faithful Chameleon.

When the chameleon had to explain his changes of color, it is recorded that "Then first the creature found a tongue." The political chameleon differs from the natural one. He is all tongue, and he uses it, while exhibiting in succession all the hues of the rainbow, to prove that he has never changed his color at all.—London Saturday Review.

Why the Duke Sold His Estate.

The Duke of Westminster, who has scandalized the English aristocracy by selling Citrsden, his ancestral estate in Berks, to Mr. Astor, excuses himself by saying that he has a family of 10 children, for one of whom he has to provide $500 a year to keep up his rank.

Almost Anybody Can Do This.

A young woman who is altogether independent, but who has the very small income of $600 a year, suddenly resolved last fall to go abroad for the first time. She engaged a second class passage on a fast steamer and paid $65, besides $5 to the steward, for a large room and most excellent fare. Her companions on the vessel were few and very agreeable people, quite folks like here. She went directly to Torquay, where she found board for $7 a week and where she spent the winter, going up to London toward spring and making a fortnight's trip to Paris with a little Frenchwoman. The latter summer she set her exactly $65. She arrived home in the middle of May, not having overdrawn her income, delighted with her eight months in Europe and determined to do the whole thing over again.—Philadelphia Press.

Hard Stories to Find.

A district visitor of wide experience among the ill and the ignorant finds it an easy task to read to her "poor things." They want something bright and moderately cheerful. It must be short and direct, and raw leagues simplicity itself. One book alone still goes in a placed in such a position how few of these books there are. Miss Wilkins' stories were found to fit all requirements. The most illiterate could grasp them. The most fastidious invalid could be brought to listen without fatigue. They and they only were precisely what was needed.—Exchanges.

PHOTOGRAPHS IN MULTIPLE.

Tiny Portraits Turned Out by Thousands to Satisfy a Fad.

Hidden under the staircase of a frame building on Pennsylvania avenue is an oddity in the shape of a photographer's shop. Nobody ever goes there to have his picture taken, and yet the business is a profitable one. For one thing, the proprietor has a long lease of the premises at a rental of only $9 a month. His establishment amounts to nothing more than a large closet, which is utilized as a darkroom for work. There is nothing to be seen of screens, skylights, shabby furniture, which looks as good as new when taken by the camera, or the instruments for holding the head steady, which are so suggestive of torture to children. The words, "Look pleasant, please," are never uttered in this secluded studio.

In fact, the photographer himself is very rarely to be found on the premises. People send in pictures of themselves to be reproduced by an extraordinary process of multiplication. They must be cabinet sized photographs. He has an instrument which looks very much like a stereoscope of the sort that one looks through at photographs, only about three times as big. In place of the part for the eyes there is a small camera, and a few inches in front of the latter is a kind of frame in which the cabinet portrait is reproduced in full. The camera, though such a little one, has 98 lenses. One might compare it to the eye of a bee, which is multiple in like fashion.

It is a snap camera and makes 98 miniature copies of the cabinet portrait at one shot on a single negative. From the negative the pictures are printed off in sheets of 98 distinct photographs each. It does not take long to produce them in large quantities at this rate, and so the operator finds a profit in selling them at the price of $1 for 50. He sells 100 for $2, 500 for $7, or 1,000 for $14. It is a very cheap way to procure a lot of counterfeit presentments of one's self. A good many people order 500 or 1,000. At the time of the inauguration such photographs of Mr. Cleveland were worn as badges by some of the visiting political clubs, with a ribbon fastening each one to the buttonhole of the wearer.

The back of these little photographs, which are a novelty, are spread with destrine. It serves as a sort of mucilage, so that the pictures can be licked like postage stamps and stuck upon anything. Commercial travelers affix them to the corners of their "advance cards" sometimes, which they mail a week or two ahead to firms in towns which they expect to visit shortly. Thus the recipients get a notion of the appearance of the agent before he comes along if they were not previously acquainted with him or are agreeably reminded of his physiognomy. In the same manner theatrical people stick them on their letters, and various other professional persons adopt similar practices. In fact, it is quite a fad.—San Francisco Examiner.

One of Ralph Waldo Emerson's Stories.

Mr. Emerson himself had a story I forget whether I heard it in a lecture or in conversation—about a New England coma outer who went into a hatshop and selected for himself a costly hat. The hat was put on and the dealer supposed he was to be paid, but the man whom he had thought to be a purchaser said simply, "Oh, I pay nothing for anything. I am the man who does not believe in money." The poor dealer had a note to meet at the bank that day and hardly knew how to do it. He looked with dumb delight upon his customer and said: "I wish to God, sir, that nobody else believed in money! Take the hat, with my thanks to you for coming for it."

Mr. Emerson would say this was all spontaneous—it was natural on the part of the customer and on the part of the trader. But when, the next day, another man who had heard the story came into the shop and selected for himself his hat and said that he did not believe in money, the dealer refused the imitator where he had accepted so readily the inventor. And Emerson drew the moral from the story which I want to draw now. A prophet who speaks the word that comes to him from the living God speaks, I may say, with the living God's power. But he who imitates the prophet has no spell. —Edward E. Hale's Address.

Engagements and Marriages.

The following figures have been compiled from the combined recollections of 20 maiden ladies and 45 military officers, all resident in the county town of one of the home counties. Out of the 1,540 engagements to marry which their joint reminiscences present, 46, or about 3 per cent, ended in lunacy, incarceration or decease of one of the parties; 383, or 25 per cent, were broken off at the instance of the girl, and 262, or about 17 per cent, by the man; 109, as near as possible 11 per cent, were interfered with by friends; 154, exactly 10 per cent, came to an end for reasons not made public; 185, or about 12 per cent, faded away without incident in the lapse of years; 108, say 7 per cent (not included in any previous category), led to actions for breach of promise. The remainder, a pettifogging 18 per cent, resulted in marriage.—London Letter.

A Young Woman's Reasoning.

"I am told, dear, that Jack Rattlepate spent most of his vacation in your back parlor. Aren't you giving him rather a dangerous amount of encouragement?"

"Why, no, dearest, he is merely a boy. To be sure, he is a year older than I, but I shall be out of it years while Jack has two years more in college, and it will be six years after that before he can earn much of anything. So practically he is six years younger than I, and that makes him 12. It is absurd to talk of encouraging a boy so young as that."—Harper's Bazar.

A Cruel Query.

Mrs. Watts—Oh, we had such a time at home last night! Mr. Watts thought there was a burglar in the house, and he got his revolver, and it went off, and the ball went right through my hair.

A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with interest: "I suffered terribly with the much creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat them quite a deal every night to get relief from the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a pain in the small of my back and across the waist, together with an indescribable 'goneness' in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, which seemed to defy their universal remedies. There is no belief. Such is Paine's Celery Compound. They say it continues its healthy progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies, such misery prevent. I had been receiving treatment from a physician, but with no perceptible benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Before it was gone I felt its beneficial effects, and in a few days had passed before every one of the symptoms having had yet me, and these has not been even slightly troublesome since its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had given away those 10 to life. Some others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recommendation, and it has done as much for them as it did for me. I am willing to make this statement for publication." Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee first bottle benefits or money back. Dr. Miles' Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price $1 per bottle, or bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

That Tired Feeling

Mr. J. B. Emerson.

Is a most perplexing one to both people themselves and their friends. Mr. J. B. Emerson, of Lowell, Mass., says: "I had for five years been very severe pain in my stomach, gradually growing worse. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, being convinced that I was troubled with Dyspepsia complicated with Liver and Kidney troubles. I improved at once and am certainly very much better and feel more like working.

CAUTION.—No Tags will be received before January 1st, 1894, nor after February 1st, 1894. Each package containing tags must be marked plainly with Name of Sender, Town, County, State, and Number of Tags in each package. All charges on packages must be prepaid.

READ.—SPEAR HEAD possesses more qualities of intrinsic value than any other plug tobacco produced. It is the sweetest, the tenderest, the richest. SPEAR HEAD is absolutely, positively and distinctively different in flavor from any other plug tobacco. A trial will convince the most skeptical of this fact. It is the largest seller of any similar shape and style on earth, which proves that it has caught the popular taste and pleases the people. Try it, and participate in the contest for prizes. Remember a TIN TAG is on every 10 cent piece of SPEAR HEAD you buy. Send in the tags, no matter how small the quantity.

Very sincerely,
THE P. J. SORG COMPANY, MIDDLETOWN, OHIO.

☞ A list of the people obtaining these prizes in this county will be published in this paper immediately after February 1st, 1894.
