A BURGLARY.

I once knew two industrious mechanics named Pierre and Baptiste. They dwelt in a ramshackle tenemont at Bantt aux Belouili, where each had a dozen children to support besides their wives, who it is grisvous to rolste, were drones. They were only nominally acquainted with that goodly art commonly associated with charwomen.

Pierreand Baptists were hard workers. They werked far into the night and occasionally the thin mists of dawn had begun to break on the marrow city pavoments before their labors would conse. No one could truthfully say that theirs was not a hard serned pillow. Sometimes they did not toil in valu, It depended largely upon the police.

The fact was that the monthly sales had been musually heavy, and a page of the balance had been misled. The bead bookkeeper spent upward of an hour in casting up both the entries of himself and his subordinates after the establishment had closed its deers for the day.

If he resisted, it might mean number in the end, whereas, if they did not let him out at all, they would stand no chance of profitting by the pecuniary contents of the safe. Besides, as the man could scarcely live thus till morning, they would be responsible for his taking off. Thus reasoned Pierre and Baytiste. These were not comforting reflections, but there was still another and a better in reserve. What if, after all, the man were himself a felon Might he not be a companion criberacker? In that case they would merely have to divide the spotia.

It was almost at the same moment, although hours seemed to have passed, that the drum of his car, now abnormally sensitive, was almost split into fragments. A frightful, menotonous changer rent the interior of the safe.

The bookkeeper need to observe afterward that a single second's deviation of characteristic thought and he would have gone mad. Stronger minds in a parallel situation would have indeed coliagsed. But a weaker much can never confront the inevitable, but clings more stubborely to hope. They are only weak individuals who in the act of drowning catch at straws.

As the bookkeeper felt himself gradually growing faint for want of air to breath his revivitied hope led him to deliberately crash his fist into the wood work with which the interior of the safe was fitted, in scentaire fashion, one drawer being built above another. This gave him a few additional cubic foot of air.

As may have been conjectured, the miles which emets the bookkeeper's car was that of a drill. Although acutely diagorned within, the seand was practically smothered on the outside of the wants.

No training makes men so effective for every day use or legaves them so alert, prompt and full of resource. The adoption of military education in carriest would lead to the adjustment of serious questions, physical and national.

The mercely useless mechanical part of drill which is mainly for parade purposes would have to be dropped, and useless eschooling would have to be thrown out.

thrown out.

A child taught to obey in the first A count taught to aboy in the first place and efficiently guided in study can master the curress of our schools in half the time now sport. This by the way. The great point about military training is that it enforces curreles for a pur-pose, not merely for thesake of exercise. —Shirley Dare in New York Herald.
