ATTENTION, FARMERS!!
"A penny saved is a penny earned."
The undersigned beg leave to inform the public that they continue to manufacture, at Marion Furnace, near Perrysville, in Armagh township, Minniflin county, their superior Horse Power and Grain Threshers. Their horse power, &c., has so long stood the test, that it would seem needless to add their recommendation. It is an improvement on the much esteemed Burrel & Milton plan, and has the merit of accomplishing a great deal of work with less power and labor than any other now in use. A trial will not fail to give satisfaction. We also continue the manufacture of PLOUGHS, of all patterns, and will agree to warrant satisfaction to the purchaser in every instance, or the article may be returned, and no charge will be made. Repairing will be done promptly, and upon reasonable terms. Grain of all kinds will be received in exchange for work—all horses, and old metal, if delivered at the shop. SHIRES & BARGER. Marion Furnace, March 31, 1849—2m.

THE MASON OF MONTEREY.
The lurid sun hung low and red,
Above the plains of Monterey,
Where 'mong the dying and the dead,
A young and wounded soldier lay:
Still from the cannon's iron throat,
Hoarse thunder burst and gleaming flame;
And blended with the bugle's note,
The far off shout of triumph came.
But heeded not that shout of pride,
The soldier stretched upon the plain,
For oozed away life's purple tide,
And fever burned in every vein:
His thoughts were in his native land;
Among the friends he held most dear;
Again he felt the breezes bland,
And saw the waters gliding near.
"Alas," he sighed, "delicious dream,
Those scenes shall never greet me more:
O! for one draught from that sweet stream
That sings beside my father's door."
Just then a Mason passing by,
By the sweet angel, Mercy, sent,
Caught the poor youth's desponding sigh,
And listened to his sad lament.
He brought him water, bright and clear,
And bound with skill each bleeding wound;
Then bore him in his breast sincere
Far from that bloody battle ground.
Long death and life together strove,
And oft life's lamp burned dim and low;
But in his faithful work of love,
Ne'er did the Mason weary grow.
He marked with deep, intense delight,
Health smile upon the grateful youth,
And heard him bless that Order bright,
Whose lovely guiding star is Truth—
That Order whose pure sons are found,
Where'er the foot of man does rove,
Still pouring richest blessings round—
The ministers of peace and love.

Miscellaneous.

From Godey's Lady's Book.
RUTH:
Or, the Reward of the Daughter-in-law.

BY REV. JOHN P. DUBBIN, D. D.

As the Autumn approached the husbandmen of Judah prepared to sow their seed. All things were ready, and they waited for the first rain. The month of November was fast passing away, as each morning the eyes of the inhabitants of Bethlehem were turned to the west, hoping to descry the gathering cloud impending over the Mediterranean. Not a speck was seen in the skies, and the glorious sun continued daily to ascend to his meridian and scorch the dusty hills of Judah. At length the vernal equinox arrived that should have brought the latter rain, but it came not. The wells were dry, and the cisterns had no water. The flocks fainted in the fields and the herdsmen returned to their masters and sat down before them in sorrow.

Eliamelech, the chief of the Bethlehemites, looked upon Naomi, the wife of his youth, and beheld her womanly form yielding to the famine. He scarcely dared to cast a steady glance upon his two sons, Mahlon and Chilion, who a year ago, were two vigorous sprouts shooting up in his house, and promising to overshadow and refresh the old age of their parents, and maintain the supremacy of their family among their people. Eliamelech ascended southward to the heights that overlooked the Dead Sea and commanded a view of the land of Moab. He beheld its fields whitening to the harvest, and its crystal streams sparkling in the sun. And although it was the land of the Gentiles, where all the people bowed down to Cheemosh, yet he resolved to go thither, that he might obtain bread and water, and his family live. He quickly found a grave in this land of idolatry, and Naomi was left a widow with two sons blooming into manhood. Obeying the dictates of nature, which triumph over conventional rules, the young men looked upon the ruddy daughters of Moab and loved them. They chose from among them Ruth and Orpah for wives. In a few years Naomi was rendered unutterably bitter by the loss of her two sons and the bereavement of her daughters in law, who were doubly afflicted by being left childless. In this hour Naomi turned her thoughts towards her people in Bethlehem-Judah, from whence the report had reached her that plenty had again blessed her land. She arose to depart to her own country, and Ruth and Orpah accompanied her to the borders of Moab.

Here Naomi proposed to take leave of the two young widows; and her address to them is one of the most touching passages ever pronounced by the lips of woman.—The essence of woman's heart and hopes, as God hath made them, is disclosed in it. She begins with a profound and touching expression of gratitude—"The Lord deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with the dead and with me." What an exalted character of these two young widows does the expression suggest. Their conduct towards their husbands had been such as to satisfy even their mother in law, and to become the measure of the divine blessing which she desired should be given to them—"The Lord deal kindly with you as ye have dealt with the dead and with me."

But when she comes to specify the blessings of the Lord which she deems a just reward for their fidelity and kindness to their husbands and herself, she descends into the secret fountain of the female heart, and utters the precious truth which dwells unchangably there. "The Lord grant that ye may find rest, each in the house of her husband." Her words recalled to these young widows the happiness of former days; and as their mother in law gave them a parting kiss, they lifted up their voices and wept, and said—"We will return with thee to thy people." The reply of Naomi glows with the great living truth, that woman can find her natural and permanent rest only in the house of her husband. And Naomi said—"Why will ye go with me? I have no more sons that may be your husbands; I am a widow: and had I a husband, and should I also have sons, would ye tarry for them till they are grown?" And when she had uttered these words, they lifted up their voices and wept again. Orpha hearkened to the advice of her mother in law, gave her a parting kiss, and returned to her own people in Moab. But Ruth clung to Naomi. Now commenced a still more earnest struggle between these two remarkable women. Naomi was unwilling that the beauty and bloom of youth should be wasted in her service; and she took the advantage of the example of Orpha, and said—"Behold, thy sister hath gone back unto her people and unto her gods: return thou after her." For three thousand years the answer of Ruth to the earnest and disinterested advice of Naomi, has stood forth in the history of filial affection and duty as the sun in the firmament of heaven. There is no parallel to it in the records of humanity. And Ruth said,—"Entreat me not to leave thee or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest, I will go; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God, where thou diest will I die and there will I be buried; the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death shall part thee and me."

To these words Naomi made no reply; they were unanswered; and silently the two widows journeyed on foot towards Bethlehem-Judah. When the relict of Eliamelech appeared among her people, they said in amazement—"Is this Naomi? The sound of her name used to suggest to us her beauty and happiness. She departed from us with her husband and sons, and lo she returns to us in sorrow, and with but one poor hand maiden."

And Naomi said—"Call me not Naomi, but Mara; for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me." Truly a dark cloud hung over the house of Naomi and Ruth. They had given brilliant examples of the brightest of womanly virtues—fidelity to their husband and to Ruth; and now God was about to honor her with very great honor,—even to make her one of the builders of the house of David.

Naomi and Ruth arrived at Bethlehem in the spring, in the beginning of the barley harvest; and this apparently small matter was the opening of the magnificent designs of Providence towards Ruth, the Moabitess widow. The custom of the country permitted poor young women to glean in the fields, and the pressing wants of Naomi quickly prompted the excellent heart of Ruth to say to her—"Let me now go to the field and glean ears of corn after him in whose sight I shall find grace." And Naomi said—"Go, my daughter."

The first adventure of Ruth suggests clearly the magnificent destiny which awaits her. Upon returning in the evening she related to Naomi the beautiful and prophetic incidents of the day. "It was my hap," she said "to light on a part of the field that belonged to Boaz. And when he came out to see the reapers he inquired 'whose damsel is this?'—and being informed, he said to the young men, 'Let her glean even among the sheaves and reproach her not; and let fall also some of the handfuls on purpose for her, and leave them that she may glean them and rebuke her not.' Then turning to me he said, 'Go not, my daughter, to glean in any other field, but abide here fast by my maids. I have charged the young men that they shall not touch thee; and when thou art athirst, go and drink of that which the young men have drawn from the wells. For it hath fully been shown me all that thou hast done unto thy mother in law since the death of thy husband. The Lord recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the God of Israel, under whose wings thou art come to trust. At meal time come thou hither, and eat of the bread and dip thy morsel in the vinegar, and as I sat with the maids, he reached me parched corn with his own hands.'

As Ruth related these incidents, she blanched and withered countenance of Naomi glowed with visions of hope; and she saw the star of her family about to rise again. She perceived, in the language and conduct of Boaz, and particularly in that 'handful of parched corn,' his young affection for the enchanting Moabitess widow.—At the same time she remembered that Boaz was a kinsman of her husband, a mighty man of wealth, which instantly brought to her mind the law in Israel, that the childless widow should become the wife of the brother or next nearest of kin of the deceased, for the purpose of raising up seed on the estate of the departed, so that it might not pass out of the original family. She was now old, and now childless; but Ruth, in the eye of the law, in her place; and she said—"My daughter, shall I not seek rest for thee, that it may be well with thee?" And the ardent and dutiful daughter in law replied (for she had seen and loved Boaz, the lord of the rich fields in which she had gleaned, and with the instinct of woman on such occasions, saw the bearing of Naomi's question.) "All that thou sayest unto me I will do."

The introduction of Ruth to Boaz is too beautiful, delicate, dangerous and sublime—virtuous to be recited here. Read it in the Book of Ruth, and you will see that Boaz rivals Joseph in that virtue for which his renown has come down to us through 3,500 years. But there was one dark cloud impending over the hopes and wishes of Boaz and Ruth. The law of Israel gave Ruth to the nearest kinsman of the deceased brother, and Boaz was only second of kin. Boaz feared God as well as loved Ruth; and observe with what dignity and frankness he unfolds to her the appalling fact that another had a right to her by law. "It is true," said he to Ruth, "that I am thy near kinsman; however, there is a kinsman nearer than I.—Tarry this night, and it shall be in the morning that if he will perform unto thee the part of a kinsman, well let him do the kinsman's part. But if he will not do the part of a kinsman to thee, then will I as the Lord liveth." Ruth related to Naomi the result of this interview with Boaz, and her reply is proof of woman's sagacity and judgment in matters of the affection. "Sit still my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall; for the man will not be in rest until he have finished the thing this day."

She spoke truly, for in an hour Boaz took measures to test the matter legally. He went up to the gate, and sat him down there; and behold the kinsman came by, unto whom he said—"Ho! such a one, turn aside and sit down here. I thought to advertise thee, that Naomi, the widow of my brother Eliamelech, selleth her estate. If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it; if not, I am next of kin to thee." And he said "I will redeem it."

When this kinsman, Mr. 'Ho! Such a one' declared that he would buy it, he seems not to have known that a young and blooming widow was a necessary part of the purchase. He supposed that the aged and neglected Naomi was the only embarrassment; and it might have occurred to him that he might wholly disrespect her as a wife; and at her death, without children, the estate of her former husband would come to him and his children. Boaz immediately reveals to him the condition of the purchase. "What day thou buyest the field of Naomi, thou must buy it also of Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of the dead, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance." And the kinsman answered—"Then I will not redeem it."

The heart of Boaz beat high at this answer, and he immediately turned to the elders present in the gate, said—"Ye are witnesses this day that I have bought all that was Eliamelech's. Moreover, Ruth the Moabitess, the widow of Mahlon, have I purchased to be my wife, and to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance." And all the people said—"we are witnesses." The Lord make the woman that has come into thy house like Rachael and like Leah, which two did build this house of Israel; and do thou worthily, and be famous in Bethlehem."

Behold now the reward of fidelity in the wife, and of affectionate duty in the daughter in law. The aged Naomi flourishes again in her old age, and receives into her bosom the son of Boaz and Ruth, who are transcendently honored in being the ancestors of David the king, and Messiah the prince of Peace, in whose veins, therefore, ran the blood of the Jew from Boaz, and of the Gentile from Ruth.

OBEYING INSTRUCTIONS.—The Legislature of Illinois adopted a series of resolutions instructing Senator Douglass to resign his seat in the United States Senate. The honorable gentleman refused to obey, on the ground that the Whig members of the Legislature voted for the instructions, and he does not recognize them as his constituents.

A WORLD ON FIRE.—Lieut. Maury, Superintendent of the National Observatory, Washington, says in a late address: It may be that there is now, at this very time, in the firmament above, a world on fire. Argus, a well known star in the southern hemisphere, has suddenly blazed forth, and from a star of the second or third magnitude, now glazes with the brilliancy of the first.

SAD DESTRUCTION.—The magnificent mansion at Silver Lake, Susquehanna county, the residence of Dr. Rose, and one of the most beautiful edifices in Pennsylvania, has been destroyed by fire. The building cost $30,000, and there is no insurance.

La Verdad, Spanish paper of New York, announces the escape of Don Cirilo Villaverde from the prison of Havana, where he was confined on a charge of high treason, and his arrival at Savannah. Don Cirilo, writing from the latter place, congratulates himself that he is "under the wings of the American Eagle."

EMIGRATION AT NEW YORK.—22,450 emigrants arrived at the port of New York during the month of April. 1,190 arrived on Tuesday last.

DEW DROPS.

A small drop of ink,
Falling like dew upon a thought produces
That which makes thousands, perhaps millions, think. [Byron.]

For in itself a thought,
A slumbering thought, is capable of years,
And curdles a long life into one hour. [Ibid.]

We cannot all be masters, nor all masters
Cannot be truly followed. [Shakespeare.]

The good die first,
And they, whose hearts are dry as summer dust,
Burn to the socket. [Wordsworth.]

It cannot be that our life is a bubble, cast up by the ocean of Eternity, to float a moment on the wave, and then sink into darkness and nothingness. [Prentice.]

Some feelings are to mortals given,
With less of earth in them than heaven;
And if there be a human tear
From passion's dross refined and clear,
A tear so limpid and so meek,
It would not stain an Angel's cheek,
'Tis that which pious father's shed
Upon a dutiful daughter's head. [Scott.]

CONSCIOUS RECTITUDE.—If a man has correct principles he can never be laughed out of them. The shrug of the shoulder—the biting remark—the contemptuous look—and the scolding air, may cause a slight pain in his bosom; but the pain is produced by a consciousness of his own virtue. It is from pity to those who err. He sees the tendency of unbridled passion, and this knowledge oftentimes causes a tear to fill his eye. The principles he has embraced—to influence and govern his whole life—he knows are founded on truth; and though cast out from the pale of society—turned away from the off-scouring of the earth—he feels a calmness, a serenity within, a consciousness of doing right, that buoy him up under every trial. Such are the principles which are based on Bible truth. Let these principles be yours, young man, as you commence your career in life. Be not seduced by evil counsel—unprincipled associates. With virtuous desires—with a deep anxiety to know what is right—and a jealous watch over the natural heart, you cannot but overcome any unhalloved propensity, and finally triumph over every sinful desire.

'Ma' said an inquisitive little girl, 'will rich and poor people go to heaven?' 'Yes, my dear, they will be all alike there.'

'Then, ma, why don't rich and poor Christians associate together here?' The mother did not answer.

'Charles,' said a father to a son, while they were working in a saw mill, 'what possesses you to associate with such girls as you do? When I was of your age I could go with the first cut.' 'But,' said Charles, 'the first cut is always a slab—did you know that?' 'Help me to turn this log, Charles—quick!'
