No. III.

The principal occupation of young people who have nothing particular to do, seems to be novel reading, at least I should judge so from having seen almost every young lady within my knowledge with one on hand at hours that might have been This indiscriminate reading of loose works is undoubtedly one of the evils of the age, and in my opinion requires as much reform as profanity, immorality, or intemperance. I would not go so far as to proscribe all works of fiction, for there are many inculcating sentiments well worth the study of man, but these are drawn from nature, and the characters who figure in them are generally but mortals-but for the vile trash engendering immoral thoughts and feelings, and creating a distaste for solid reading, I, for one, would be willing to make an auto de fe of the whole tribe. The Rev. James Lyon, of St. Louis, re-The Rev. James Lyon, of St. Louis, recently delivered a lecture on this subject, in which so faithful a picture is drawn of the reader and writer of such stuff, that I After classifying novel writers, he goes on to show that the writings of such persons cannot be beneficial, for, as a general thing, the principles they inculcate are most inju-

Novel readers he divides into four classes: first, those who consider it fashionable or genteel to read novels; secondly, the idle in mind and body; thirdly, the wonder loving, credulous and weak; and fourthly, the restless and unhappy, those with whom time is a drug, life a burden. He enters into specific descriptions of these different classes of writers and readers, and shows them off in colors not quite so fascinating as those in which their favorite before the solution of these different classes of writers and readers, and shows them off in colors not quite so fascinating as those in which their favorite before the solution of these different classes of writers and readers, and our country will come to such a degree of power and wealth that we will be able to the solution of these different classes of writers and readers, and shows them off in colors not quite so the solution of these different classes of writers and readers, and shows them off in colors not quite so the solution of th enters into specific descriptions of these fascinating as those in which their favorite heroes and heroines are usually represent- earth.' ed, but his characters are realities, while the heroes and heroines of romance exist only in the vivid imagination of the author. He then goes on to describe the definition of the characters indispensable to novels of the kind I speak of-the hero, the heroine, and the villain: 'The hero is, for the most part, a fashionable rake, a libertine, a free-thinker, an outlaw, but fine looking, and possessed of some generous traits of character, sufficient, at least, to constitute him a clever thr fellow,' whom every one anust love-or at all events, if censure they must, it is very faint, and only serves to show in bolder relief their insuppressible admiration.

'The heroine is always in love-generally with the hero; but sometimes with a minor character. She is lovely, patient and incorruptibly constant, and very much oppressed. This rule is almost arbitrary; sentiments of the assembly, amid great cheer. hence nothing further can be said about 'The villain, who is generally a hypocrite in religion, perhaps himself a priest, or a minister of the gospel; or, a dean or an office-bearer in the church; or he may be a school master, or a judge or an officer of the law; or one selected from some class or profession, whose duty it is to restrain vice and recommend virtue, is drawn hateful in the extreme, but, at the same time, most expert and successful in his villanies; insomuch that, whilst you detest the man, you cannot but admire his ingenuity, daring and bravery. He is nade to display to the eye of the beholder, or the mind of the reader, all the devi-ous paths of villainy. He gives, by ex-The shortest term falling to the lot of Wm. B. ous paths of villainy. He gives, by example, full instruction in the arts of the selucer-the tricks of the gambler-the plots of the assassin—the unerring devices of the robber-and the deep laid schemes of the slanderer and traducer.'

' Fools and clowns are also an indispensable part of the dramatis personæ of the modern novel. They are generally taken from the sober, industrious, the plain and from the sober, industrious, the plain and honest part of the community. The honest laborer is the 'butt,' the machine is the way to Fort Gibson on sick leave, when he became prostrated by disease and died before he awkward booby,' and the farmer's daugher is the 'unfashionable lass,' to be laughed

There is a great deal of truth expressed in the foregoing paragraphs-truths that annot be too forcibly impressed upon the minds of old and young-because the later are too frequently led into paths they should not follow by becoming tainted with a passion for reading such moral miasma, and, to gratify it, neglect all those obligaions of duty incumbent on every member of society. Reader, if you have such trash on hand, throw it into the fire-that is the only fitting place for it.

The Great Kossuth Banquet in New York.

New York, Dec. 11.
At six o'clock, this evening, a large number of invited guests assembled at the Irving House to partake of the dinner given by the Corporation to Kossuth.

Mayor Kingsland presided, and Judge Edmonds acted as vice president. Kossuth sat on the right of the chairman. There were about 300 persons present, and the dinner for magnificence has never been equaled, if surpassed, in this city. At the hour appointed, Kossuth, ac-companied by the Mayor, entered the room, the band playing—"Hail to the Chief."

After the cloth had been removed, a complimentary toast to the illustrious stranger was proposed and received with the greatest enthusi-

As soon as the feeling subsided, Kossuth arose and said:—In returning my humble thanks for the honor you did me by your toast and by coup-ling my humble name with that cause which is the dearest aim of my life, I confess to be so one on hand at hours that might have been profitably devoted to more useful study. overwhelmed with emotion by all it was my prodigious lot to have experienced since I arrived on your glorious shores, that I am unable to find words to express my feelings, and knowing that all the honor I meet with has the highest meaning of principles, I at once beg leave to fall back to my duties, which are the lasting topics of my reflections, sorrows and my hopes; I must, therefore, humbly embrace the opportunity to claim your indulgence for a pretty long, plain and in no case eloquent development of my humble views to the benefit of that cause which the citizens of the United States, and you particularly, honor with generous sympathy.

Kossuth alluded to the sympathy which was felt by the people of the United States for Hungary, but said that his hopes were checked by the ruling and apparently lasting principles left us by our forefathers, we naturally felt an in-stinctive fear to touch even with improving ed by the principles laid down and established doubt whether any sensible man can be found to dissent from him in his views. now in a position to do so without fear from any

He said that never had a country been more foully, sacrilegiously attacked than Hungary. All the sufferings of your country, which drove your forefathers to take up arms, are but slight in comparison with the universal wrongs which we have suffered. If that cause is not sufficient to insure the support of good, willing men, then will justice fly the earth, and only the Cains o humanity walk proudly with impervious brow about the ruins of liberty on the earth.

He next alluded to the doctrine established by Mr. Munroe, and his views upon national mat-ters. He said that the United States could not remain indifferent to the cause of freedom throughout the world.

He spoke of the Greek struggle, and alluded to Mr. Clay and to Mr. Webster, and also to his reception by the people of New York, and said that the opinion of the people generally is already an avowed principle of the policy of the government.

Two Young MEN DROWNED .- A most melancholy occurrence transpired on Sunday last, the rehearsal of which is painful:-Two young men, brothers, named Spear, one aged 17 and the other 21 years, on that day went out on the ice, on Mill Creek, above Mrs. Hollenback's Mill, about one mile above this Berough, for the purpose of fishing. They cut a hole through the ice, and succeeded in taking a single fish, when one of them broke through—the other brother attempted to rescue him—broke in also—and both were drowned. Remember the Sabbath Day.

O the Honorable the Judges of the Court of Quarter Sessions of Mifflin County.

The Grand Inquest of the County of Mifflin, respectfully repre-ents: That they believe the selling of Intoxicating Liquors by Licensed Tavern-keepers, and others, upon the Sabbath Day, to be a great public evil, destruc-tive to the morals of the young, and a great source of disorder, riot and crime. That the Court has every disposition to aid, to the extent of its power, to suppress vice and promote sound morals, we have full confidence; and we also believe that respectable innkeepers would gladly close their bars on that day, if all others would do so, ther of their own accord, or by direction of the Court to be closed upon the Sabbath Day, and that such orders have produced the happiest results. The Grand Inquest of Mifflin county would therefore respectfully ask the Court to make an order to that effect in this county DAVID McCLURE, Foreman.
