Poetry.

From the Dublin University Magazine. MEMORY.

Soft as the rays of sunlight stealing

On the dying day; Sweet as chimes of low bells pealing, When eve fades away; Sad as winds of night that moan, Through the heath o'er mountain lone, Come the thought of days now gone On manhood's memory.

As the sunbeams from the heaven Hide at eve their light; As the bells when fades the even Peal not on the night; As the night wind cease to sigh When the rain falls from the sky, Pass the thoughts of days gone by From age's memory.

Yet the sunlight in the morning Forth again shall break, And the bells gives sweet-voiced warning To the world to wake. Soon the winds shall freshly breathe O'er the mountain's purple heath; But the path is lost in death-

Another asked him the same question, and received the same answer.

At last the chief called him, and asked him the same question, and he said 'I have told two of your people already that I have forty dinars sewed up in my clothes.' He ordered the clothes to be ripped open and found the money. 'And how came you to tell this?' said the chief.

· Because,' replied the child, · I would not be false to my mother, to whom I promised never to tell a lie.'

· Child,' said the robber, 'art thou so mindful of thy duty to thy mother at thy years, and am I insensible at my age of the duty I owe to God? Give me thy hand that I may swear repentance on it.' He did so and his followers were all struck with the scene.

· You have been our leader in guilt,' said they to the chief, be the same in the path of virtue;' and they instantly made ance on the boy's hand.

There is a moral in this story which goes beyond the direct influence of the mother on the child. This noble sentiment infused into the breast of the child is again with a bundle of straw, which supplies a transfused from breast to breast, till those who feel it know not whence it came.

Awful Tragedy in Baltimore. MURDERS AND SUICIDE.-The Baltimore Patriot, of Saturday, gives the following

dreadful narration of crime:-Our city was thrown into great excitement this morning, by the perpetration of one of the most awful tragedies we have ever been called upon as journalists to record. The location of the dreadful affair is in Maiden Lane, (a small court running from East to Aisquith street,) between Baltimore and Fayette streets. The facts, so far as we could ascertain, are as follows :- About half-past five o'clock this morning, fire was discovered issuing from the upper story of a small brick house in Maiden Lane, one door from East street, occupied for some time past by a man named James White, a boot maker. The firemen and police were promptly on the ground, and succeeded in confining the fire to the part of the house where it originated. No person appearing in the house at the time of the fire, and it being known that it was occupied, some uneasiness was felt as to the fate of the inmates, and after the flames were subdued, some of the police ascended to the upper story, where a most awful and horrid speciacle met their sight. The body of White was found lying upon fortnight or three weeks, with Prof. Lep- the floor, with his head nearly severed from sius and his associates. Wrecked again the body, his throat being cut from ear to ear; and a few feet from him, near the hearth, was found the body of his daughter, about 15 years of age; the body of his little son, about two years old, was lying on the bed. The throats of the children were also cut, and their bodies blackened and burnt almost to a crisp by the shore of Marathon. He returned by fire! The scene was most appalling, and those who first gazed upon it, started back with horror! The bodies were still warm and smoking from the effects of the fire, and, as soon as circumstances would admit, were removed to a stable, adjoining. It was found, upon examination, that the little boy, in adlition to having his throat cut, had his brains also blown out by a pi-tol! The whole affair seemed almost too dreadful for belief, and had not the evidences been lying before them, the spectators might well have doubted if any one could exist, so hardened as to perpetrate a deed so horrible. Coroner Hooper was called on to hold an inquest upon the bodies, and from the evidence elicited, the jury rendered a verdiet that the deaths of the deceased were caused by having their throats cut by a shoe knife in the hands of James White, while probably laboring under an attack of delirium tremens-he having, previously, it is supposed, set fire to the house. This appeared to be the only conclusion to which the jury could arrive. The knife was pany, he got into a series of fights, in found lying upon the floor, and was shown to the last of which he received the swords the jury. A pistol was found afterwards, which was used, it is supposed, upon the boy, the back his horse killed under him, and was him- part of his head being greatly fractured.

This is a most horrible affair, and is another warning against a too free indulgence in intoxown men. Since then he has been cruising, and practicing hydrography on practicing hydrography on since the first present the same of his prisoners against his icating drinks. mission, of no written and seiled credentials. I am nothing but what my generous friend, the Senator of Michigan, has justly styled me, "a private and banished man." But in that, my capacity, I have a nobler credential for my mission than all the clerks of the world can write, the credential that I am a "man"-the credential that I am a "patriot"—the credential that I love with all sacrificing devotion my oppressed father land and liberty; the credential that I hate tyrants and have sworn everlasting hostility to them; the credential that I feel the strength to do good service to the cause of freedom; good service as perhaps few men can do, because I have the iron will, in this my breast, to serve faithfully, devotedly, unfatiguably, that noble cause. I have the iron will, which no power on earth can bend, which before no danger will shrink.

Who in the world, among all who live, has more and more powerful enemies than I have, who has dared more boldly to provoke all their fury upon his head, than I have. Their raging hostility is my daily food, their persecu-tion my beverage, and their generous craft the pillow of my short slumbering. And still here I stand, shouting out to heaven and to earth, "liberty! liberty! or death!" And will go on shouting until my untired voice has aroused the thunder of heaven and the roaring of those cannons of liberty which I have stamped with the motto "beware to wrong Hungary." And till I have a fair open field and a musket instead of a pen in my hand, and upon that musket a bayonet to call a terrible account for my country's wrongs. And I have the credential that I trust to God in heaven and to justice on earth that I offend no laws, but cling to the protection of laws.

"I have the credential of my people's undeniable confidence and unshaken faith to my devotion, to my manliness, to my honesty, and to my patriotism; which faith I will honestly answer without ambition, without interest, faithfully as ever, but more skillfully, because chooled by adversities. And I have the credential of the justice of the cause I plead and of the wonderful sympathy which, not my unpretending person, but that cause, has met and eets in two hemispheres.

"These are my credentials, and nothing else. To whom this is enough, he will help me, so far as the law permits, and it is his good pleasure to do; to whom these credentials are not sufficient-well, let him look for a better accredited man; I can present no better cre-

"I would yet like, in a similar dry, uninteresting, but perhaps logical and practical manner, to say something, not so much about my own personality, as rather about the line I have taken in my honest undertaking of my native land so as I have considered it my honest duty to be, openly to declare in Europe, yet on several occasions, but chiefly also to the Hungarian emigration, my fellow exiles, as well in letters from Asia, yet as also personally in England. ics about my own personal merits or abilites. I believe my life was public enough to appertain to the impartial judgment of history. For the present, I can quietly rely upon my peop'e's warm love and unabated, rather increased confidence, the more quietly, because I know that at least at home, all those who are either the directors or the tools of such intrigues, can do harm to nobody but themselves; but it might have perhaps interested you to hear how, in a small and inconsiderable circle of the Hungarian emigration, the idea was started that I must be opposed, because I have declared against all compromise with the House of Austria, or with royalty, and by declaring that my direction will be in every case republican, make impossible every other arrangement, but

I have the written proofs of it in my hands; Cincinnati, delivered on the 25th ult., but I am so tired that I must delay it until some cabin of the poorest description. It has a Kossuth stated the position he holds with other occasion. But as it was impossible for you not to be surprised to see myself precisely then attacked by some of my countrymen, when everything has shown that I am in a good train to accomplish some important good service to my country, so much that an endeavor to increase difficulties to me, looks very much like the endeaver to check a benefit to my country.

"I cannot forbear humbly to beseech you, do not therefore think less favorably of my nation solution. Yes, it was a call of distress, and of the Hongarian emigration, for which I vote myself and all the success I may meet with to a higher aim-to my country's freedom and independence. Believe me, gentlemen, that my country and its extied martyr-sons are highly worthy of your generous sympathy, though some few of their number do not always act as they should."
