We copy the following articles from the July number of the Pennsylvania Farm Journal, published by A. M. Spangler, Lancaster, Pa., at $1 per annum:

Currant Wine.

Here is a receipt for making currant wine, worth, to any of our subscribers who have a bushel of currants, at least two year's sub-scription to the Journal. We had an opportuof tasting wine made after it, which h was 2314 of such excellent quality, that we could not resist the temptation of publishing the re-ceipt. Here it is; try it and report the re-sulta: To one quart of ripe currant juice add three pounds of the very best white sugar, (the finer the quality the better,) and to this add as much water as will, with the juice and sugar, make a gallon. Put the mixture into a been redeminish. Leasing it a keg or demijohn, leaving it open for two weeks, or until the fermentation subsides; then cork it up tightly, and let it remain quiet for five months, when it will be fit for use and may be racked off into bottles.

MR. EDITOR :- In the yard attached to my residence there are several very fine fruit trees, among which are two superb Orleans plum trees. For several years after the plum trees came to bearing, we had fine crops ; bu two years since, although they blossomed well and fruited too, the young fruit fall to the ground before it had attained one tenth its, full size. Upon examination, I found that each one of the fallen plams bore a crescent shaped mark, which I could stiffbute only to the puncture of an income. Not being the the puncture of an insect. Not being famil-iar with the manners and habits of the cur-culic, I did not blame him with the mischief, but employed to method. but concluded to watch closely the ensuing spring for the depredator. Ignorant of the character of the enemy of my fruit, I determined to try an experiment with one of my trees. I accordingly procured a pound of four of sulphur, and placing a small iron fur-prices. F. I accordingly procured a pound of flour of sulphur, and placing a small iron furnace tilled with live coals on a high stool, as near to the lower branches as I could with safety, sprinkled the support on the coals satety, sprinkled the support of the coals. This was early in the morning while the at-mosphere was perfectly calm. As the fumes of the subplur ascended through the tree, I watched closely for the purpose of ascertain-ing whother any effect had been produced upon my unknown foe. Scarcely had the vapor risen to the topinost branches, when I ob-served several round looking objects falling. Upon examination, I found them to be insects which were entire strangers to me. Cathering up two or three of the nearly de-funct little creatures, I showed them to a friend somewhat skilled in etomology, who at the scamps that had the dreaded curculio-the scamps that had the preceding year de-stroyed my plums. Much delighted with the discovery, I immediately renewed the sulplar fumigation, continuing it for more than a week, and always with success against the foe. The result was most gratifying. The tree which had been fumigated, bore me a fair crop of excellent fruit, while on the other scarcely a single plum came to perfection.

This spring the two blossomed profusely. I again caused the sulphur to be applied, and at the period of writing, 1 am rejoicing in the prospect of a fine crop of plums. If you think this little experiment is worth presenting to your readers, it is at your service ; and is offered not with any desire to see my name in print, but with the hope that it may prove effectual in ridding our fruit trees of this troublesome and destructive insect.

In a former number we recorded a small but successful experiment made with it in the cultivation of experiment made with it in the cultivation of celery. Since then, we have laid another op-portunity of testing its value. When absent in March, we wrote home, giving directions to have a particular bed well manured and spaded for beans. Instead of the bed we or-dered to be spaded, the gardner selected an-other, and mistaking our directions about the manure to be availed, save it a heavy conting manure to be applied, gave it a heavy coating of proity well decomposed tan-bark. Not having any very great faith in its virtues as a manure, we were not a little mortified on our return to find our directions so lamely carried The beans, however, were planted, germinated rapidly, and at the time of the writ-ing, June 14lh, are not only in full blossom, but decidedly the most thrifty and vigorous we have seen this season. No other manure was applied, nor had any been applied to this bed for several years previously. The soil is a stiff clay, but by the application of the tan has became quite mellow, and appears to retain its warmth and moisture much better than any other bed in the garden.-EDITOR Pennsylvania Farm Jourual.]
