PRESERVATION OF FORESTS.

Where will coming generations get their supplies of timber? How they will lament the bleak and naked hills, and cry out against us for despoiling them of their chief beauty...

Forest trees should be preserved, also, for their beneficial influence upon the climate. It is universally conceded that the winters of the northern States are colder than they were thirty or forty years ago...

Out of the greatest drawbacks to farm life on the western prairies is the absence of forest trees. Wood for lumber and fuel is scarce, and houses and lands are exposed to the rale of merciless winds...

In conclusion, we earnestly plead with the farmer for a more considerate use of his woods. Remove old trees, but touch the young with a sparing hand.

THE CRANBERRY

As an Ornamental Plant.—No plant of its size can equal the Cranberry in beauty. Its leaves of rich dark green in summer, changed to a reddish brown in winter...

parent stalk, itself only the fifth part the size of a straw; excites one's sympathy lest the fruit break the parent stalk, and we at once see the wisdom of their clustering so closely together...

If the nature of the Cranberry was fully understood, it would be found in every "Country Gentleman's" yard as well as in field culture.
