ADVERTISING A MORAL DUTY.

Some years ago it was proposed by an American Physician that members of the Faculty should advertise their remedies and modes of treating diseases in the newspapers. It was a bold and manly idea. It was s ed, however, by the profession generally, as infra dig. But is there any degradation in publicity? Is it not rather the great touchstone that ties pretension and universalizes the practical benefits of all valuable inventions and discoveries? Should not a profession that aims at the mitigation of suffering and the preservation of life, make the means of obtaining these grand objects known through the channel of information most accessible to all classes and conditions, the celumns of the public press? If it declines to do so, the natural inference is either that the desire of secrecy arises from a sordid, monopolizing, egotistic spirit, or from a lack of faith in its own prescriptions.

Viewing the subject in this light, we may presume Professor Holloway some twenty years ago, overleaped the barriers which the profession had erected between itself and the public, and plunged fearlessly into the newspaper arena. He had discovered or rather invented, after years of research and experiments, two preparations which he believed to be specifies for nearly all the diseases of mankind; and as an indication of his confidence in them, and a proof of his philanthropic wish that, if really valuable, they should be accessible to the whole world, he advertised them wherever advertising media existed.-This was the severest ordeal to which he could have submitted them-the experimentum crucis. He threw them at once, as it were, be-fore the sick of all regions. He stated their properties, proclaimed what they would do, and staked reputation and fortune upon the issue. That issue has been all that he or the world could have desired. The rich and the poor, the learned and the ignorant, physicians, statesmen, monarchs, a nation of enlightened freemen, have sanctioned, used, extolled them. They are fixed facts in medical history!
