How to Avoid Midge in Wheat.

The red weevil (more commonly called the midge) is a comparatively new-comer in this latitude. It is one of the most destructive enemies of the wheat crop where it has existed for a length of time, and we may expect that in the future it will not spare us. We give the following practical suggestions from the Rural New Yorker, published at Rochester, in the midst of a country which has suffered very much by its depredations. Their timely application here may prove very useful:

The practical question which arises among cultivators is, how can we best evade the midge? Many conjectural and some very plausible theories have hitherto been promulgated on this point, few of which have proved of any great value, being either impracticable or too expensive. The result of careful experiments, by some of our most intelligent, observing and experienced grain growers, however, proves that there are three requisites to successful wheat culture in regions where the midge prevails, and these we will briefly enumerate and discuss.

1. Varieties.—The first and most requisite is to secure and sow seed of early and hardy varieties—such as the Mediterranean, Golden Drop, Dayton, &c. Those who have grown these, and experimented with more recently introduced varieties, the past year, have been quite successful. The Mediterranean has improved in quality of late years, and also in productiveness. In some instances, last year, from thirty to forty bushels per acre were produced in this country, the grain being of excellent quality, and we presume (from the fields we have examined) that the yield and quality will both prove good this season. The Dayton variety was grown in Genesee county last year, and gave good satisfaction—escaping the midge and producing thirty-five bushels per acre. The success of the experiment induced several farmers of Wheatland, in this county, to procure (from Ohio) and sow seed of this variety last fall, the product of which escaped the midge and looked very promising two weeks ago—when nearly ready for harvesting. As we stated in the Rural of the 16th, (after examining about seventy acres on the farm of Hon. Elisha Harmon,) it is a very fine variety—a white bald wheat, with stiff straw, and if it acclimates as well as the Mediterranean will prove invaluable in this region. Other new varieties have been tried on a small scale this year—such as the Boughton wheat, (seed from Virginia,) by Mr. Wray, near this city, and the Early May, (seed from Southern Illinois,) by Mr. James White of Wayne county. We hope to hear soon from these and other gentlemen who have experimented with new varieties, and that they will state the time of sowing, yield per acre, quality, &c., for the benefit of the public.

2. Time of Sowing.—The general opinion among our farmers is that, whatever seed is used, it must be sown early to escape the midge. Some are of the opinion that the Soule wheat can be successfully grown—as it has been this past season—by sowing as early as the 1st of September on rich, dry and well-prepared soil. It should be remembered, however, that the present season has been more favorable for wheat in this region than any other for perhaps twenty years, and hence that the result this year is not a safe index for ordinary seasons. We should prefer the early varieties, such as those named above, and sow as early as possible after the 25th of August—say the last week in August or first of September. This is the opinion of our best farmers, and those who have experimented most, been most successful in wheat culture, since the prevalence of the midge.

Soil and Culture.—Early varieties and early sowing will prove of little avail without a rich dry wheat soil and good culture. The great cereal cannot be produced advantageously on poor, wet land in any part of the Union, and especially in sections where the midge prevails. To produce wheat abundantly and profitably, the soil must contain the proper elements, and be in the right condition. In many cases under-draining is of the utmost importance, even on farms where it is not considered necessary. No one need expect to grow good wheat, and evade the midge, unless he has a rich, warm and comparatively dry soil, and good culture,—but with these, and attention to the requisites above named, we believe wheat can again be cultivated successfully in Western and Central New York and other midge-infested sections of the country.—American Agriculturist.
