Teachers Duty Respecting Public Opinion.

The acknowledged realm of the teacher is constantly enlarging; the duties that the teacher of to-day owes to his scholars are far more numerous and responsible than restsd upon the teacher half a century It is the natural and beneficent result of much thought by the wisest men, as the world rises to juster views of human life, to clearer perceptions of the nature, powers, and capabilities of the human mind; as the commonplace remark that education determines a man's career, is more fully understood, people naturally demand that the teachers of the young be wise and good enough to mould their characters and fix their habits of thought judiciously. A careful observer will perceive great elevation in the general tone of public sentiment in this respect. Almost everybody admits that the teacher should be plary care in the choice of companions, of that his pupils may safely and profitably

MORAL & RELGIOUS.

Men of Principle.

The man of principle needs not the restriction of seal or signature, or any legal instrument. He deals in solitude as in public, is as good as a bond, and his promise as sterling as gold. The complicated interests of men, which so often jar and conflict, are reconciled in him with a beautiful harmony. He is himself the embodiment of justice, the symbol of perfect society. His charities are not the droppings of a formal pity, but the ointment of a yearning love. In his soul there is a fountain of humor, and close by, a fountain of tears. His spirit is an instrument strung to every proper mood, touched by the light graces of the passing hour, or swept by solemn thoughts that wander through

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Two Brothers.

The Count de Lingniville and Count de Autricourt, twins, descended from an ancient family in Lorraine, resembled each other so much that when they put on the same kind of dress, which they did now and then for amusement, their servants could not distinguish the one from the oth-Their voice, gait, and deportment was the same, and these marks of resemblance were so perfect that they often threw their wives and friends into the greatest embarrassment. Being both captains of light horse, the one would put himself at the head of the other's squadron without the officers ever suspecting the change. Count

Autricourt having committed come crime, the Count de Ligniville never suffered his brother to go out without accompanying him, and the fear of seizing the innopent for the guilty rendered the orders to arrest the former of no avail. One day Count de Ligniville sent for a barber, and having suffered him to shave one half of his beard. he pretended to have occasion to go into the next apartment and put his nightgown upon his brother, who was concealed there, and taking the cloth from about his neck, he put it under the chin of his brother, and made him sit down in the place he had just quitted. The barber immediately resumed his operation, and was proceeding to finish what he had begun, as he supposed, but to his great astonishment he found that a new beard had sprung up! Not doubting that the person under his hands was the devil, he roared out with terror, and sank down in a swoon on the floor. Whilst they were endeavoring to bring him to life, Count de Autricourt retired again into his closet, and Count de Ligniville, who was half shaved, returned to his former place. This was a new case of surprise to the poor barber, who now imagined that all he saw was a dream, and he could not be convinced of the truth until he say the two brothers together. We one day saw a decanter upon a table filled with what we supposed to be water, as it was colorless, and we had never seen any stronger liquid without some slight tinge of yellow, red, or purple. Being thirsty, we thought to help our-selves, and took a generous draught, which in an instant had pervaded every drop of blood in our veins. It was cherry water, but it surely deserves a more significant appellation. It was made by crushing fresh cherries and pounding; as the juice is expressed from the grapes. They are then kept slightly warm till fermentation takes place, which sometimes happens the second and often not till the fourth week. The tub remains covered, and the pulp is stirred every two days. It can then remain a long time without injury, or be immediately distilled like brandy. So long as it runs clear, it is of the right taste and consistency, but when the liquid is thick, it is put back into the still. To prevent its taking fire before it begins to boil it is stirred violently. Like good wine, it improves with age. An imitation is sometimes made of plums, but can easily be de tected by mixing it with a few drops of water, when it looks murky, and if rubbed upon the hands has a different flavor .-The Cottages of the Alps.

Occupation of Women in France.

In France women are permitted to engage in many occupations which are performed with us entirely by the male sex. She often acts as ticket dispenser at railway stitions, as bookkeeper at hotels and as attendant on the heaped tables of the reading room.

The watchmaker consigns to her delicate touch the finer parts of his mechanism, and the jeweler the setting of his costly gems. The wood engraver expects his most delicate and tasteful cuts from her hands; and the picture dealer invites her to plant her easel in the Louvre of Luxemburg, to reproduce, as she well can, the masterpieces of ancient or modern art.

Nor is the mallet of the sculptor considered to disgrace the hands of a princessone of the noblest statues of modern times, representing Joan of Arc clasping the consecrated sword, being the production of a daughter of the late citizen king. The individual and social advantages which the honor that is thus paid to labor brings are incalculable. Pride is never permitted to interfere with usefulness; and many a young woman, who would have been debarred, as with us, by its pernicious influence, from the honorable employment of her powers, is enabled, by the wiser and more merciful arrangements which obtain in France, to secure a virtuous and comfortable independence.

A Nice Little Church Incident.-In one of the Washington churches last Sunday a pretty occurrence took place. After service a young man who carries the collecting plate, as usal put his hand in his vest pocket to place upon it a piece of money before starting to collect. He dropped as he sup-posed, a quarter on the plate, and without looking at it, passed it around among the congregation. Instead of silver, however, he had inadvertently placed a conversation lozenger in the centre of the plate, and all were astonished at seeing the lozenger with the words staring them in the face, 'Will you marry me?' The young ladies probably thought this was an unusual mode of 'proposing!' but no doubt it was the sight of them that caused the mistake.
