Letter from Capt. Frank Hess.

BELLEFONTE, August '61. Mr. Editor :- Since my return from the seat of war I hear so many and such widely different accounts of the capture, by the enemy, of a part of the company which I had the honor to command, that I deem it an act of simple justice to myself and friends, and the friends of those who still remain in the hands of the enemy, to ask permission to give, through the columns of your paper, a brief account of the unfortunate transaction. On the second of July the 5th Brigade, commanded by Gen. Negley, crossed the Potomac and took up the line of march for Martinsburg, Va. After proceeding about a mile from the river the first regimental honor -that of acting as advance guard of the moving column-was given to my company. I marched the company to the position as-signed it at the head of the column and pike leading from Williamsport, Md., to Martinsburg, until we arrived at the roada circuitous one-leading to Martinsburg by way of Hainesville. Before arriving at this point, I had asked the Col. commanding our regiment for a guide, and a Lieut. Smith, of the U. S. Topographical Engineers, being highly recommended, as I afterwards learned, to Col. Oakford as a gentleman of some military experience and great discretion, he was sent along with the guide and by special order was made my superior in command for the day. The column and the advance guard being at a halt, while the artillery and cavalry were being placed in their position in the brigade, I asked permission of Lieut. Smith to deploy the company as skirmishers, at short intervals on the right and left of the road and in that manner move forward when all was again ready to move. Lieut. Smith, however, was not in favor of this disposition of the men, but threw out flankers, twelve in num ber, on each side of the road, instructing them to march in pairs at a distance of one hundred yards in rear of each other and two undred yards from the road on either side. We had proceeded in this form about two miles when I observed two mounted men who seemed to be reconnoitring our position from a point about three fourths of a mile distant. One of them was armed with a sword and seemed to be using a glass. While the men marched slowly forward, I ran ahead and reported what I had seen, and suggested to Smith the propriety of returning and making a reconnoisance of the supposed enemy through his glass; this he refused to do and ordered us on, assigning as a reason that the persons we saw were scouts thrown out from Gen. Keim's division which he supposed was, at that time, advancing on the other road.

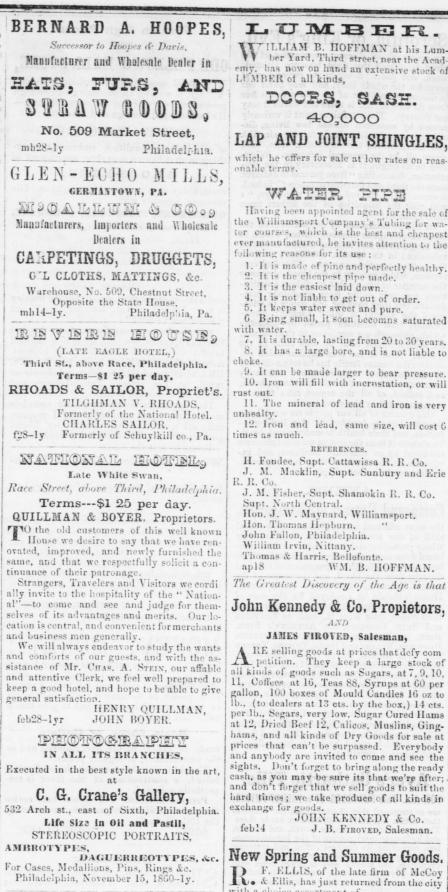

We marched on perhaps a half mile far-ther and halted the reserve in the road. The left flankers at this moment were out of sight, having penetrated a deep wood. I never saw them afterward. They were met by at least twelve times their number and resistance would have been worse than madness. A braver set, of men than they were do not breathe, nor was there a more promising offi cer of his age in our brigade than the one who commanded them that day, viz: 2d Lieut. John B. Hutchis Just as we halted evidently but a few moments before they were made prisoners, one of the men was sent in by Lieut. Hutchison to say that two or three dragoons had been seen, but by order of Lieut. Smith he was sent back to his jost. Notwithstanding Smith's constant assurances that there was no enemy there. and that the party seen were a part of our own cavalry force, I deemed the position that we then held an unsafe one, and intimated to Smith that we had better draw near er the column, as it had halted also and was now about half a mile in our rear. This did not seem to him to be necessary. Adopting a ruse that here suggested itself to my mind, by which we could draw nearer the column when it again advanced without seeming to disobey my superior, I left Smith with the men in the road and went to the head of the flankers on the right with the intention of in structing the Lieut, there in command to hold his men in check, when we again advan ced and marched forward but slowly, while I would dress the centre on him, and thus be fore proceeding far we should regain our proper position within three hundred yards of the head of the brigade. I had scarcely commenced giving these directions when a brisk firing commenced in the road. I look ed around to see what was wrong when I saw Lieut. Smith and the guide coming in full flight, hotly pursued by two or three of the enemy's cavalry. Ten or twelve of my men and Lieut. Haskings were now near me. We formed them and occupied as soon as possible an advantageous position and awaited an at-tack from a portion of the enemy's cavalry who were manœuvering in one of the fields separating us from the main body of our troops, and holding a position which entirely us off. He evidently expected to draw cut our fire at too great a distance to insure accuracy and aim, and then, being superior in numbers and well armed, charge upon us and make a whole company job of it. This, however, I did not permit him to do, and our own cavalry being momentarily ex-pected his position became a dangerous one, and rapidly retreated. The guide since told me that he and Smith saw the party approach ing through the fields on the left of the road. There was, he supposed between sixty and seventy in number, but upon examining them through his glass Lieut. Smith observed that they wore the United States cavalry uniform, and he thus mistook them for our own troops. My anxiety to avoid an action of the enemy's scouts on that day arose from the fact that my company had been placed in such a condition that, in case of attack from him on either flank, it would have been impossible to have rallied the men on the right or left, or centre, and, consequently, it would have been im possible to withstand an assault or even to retire in good order. The men in the road the time they were attacked had not grounded or stacked their arms, and were not away from their guns as some simple fellows presume, but, on the contrary, were at their posts in ranks. I know the men I had the honor to command, and when on duty they knew noth ing but duty.

Viewed in a military light alone, it was an unfortunate affair, though a common misfor-tune of war. Viewed in a social light it was hard indeed. Parents are left to mourn the loss of affectionate and doting sons, sisters the absence of their loved, brave brothers. and little children gather around a maternal parent's chair and vainly ask when a long expected father may return. But the keenest reflection to the hearts of their patriotic friends is that they are not only debarred from the pleasure of their associates for a time, but that a suffering country has lost their brave support. And deeply do I sym-pathize with them. All that I can do to in . m. sure their speedy release-which is simply to re-enlist and return to the sent of war, and aid in subduing our common enemy-shall be done. I cast no reflections on any one .--The great error that led to such disasters on that day has since been committed by others. The facts are before a generous public. The people shall deduct their own conclusions. FRANK W. HESS.

Judge Pearson on the National Crisis. In his charge to the grand jury on the opening of the Lebanon county Court last week, Judge Pearson, spesking on our present national conflict, and the laws relating to the duties of the citizens concerning the same, instructed them in substance as follows :

"To levy war ag inst the United States or adhere to the enemy in time of war, giving them aid and comfort, is high treason, but this crime can be tried only in the Federal courts. Treason may also be committed against the State of Pennsylvania by the same acts or any endeavor to subvert and overturn the government? and over that of-fence you and we have jurisdiction. But the law to which I particularly direct your attention as having a more practical bearing on the action of the people in the present exi-gency, was passed at the last session of the Legislature, and should be known and understood by all, lest any might transgress un-wittingly. The act punishes with great severity the aiding or abetting the enemy now at war with the United States, by joining their armies, or procuring any one so to do, or furnishing them any article for their aid or omfort, carrying on a correspondence with them, or giving them any intelligence what ever. It also prohibits under like penalty, every endeavor to dissuade persons from entering the service of this State or the United States or from joining any volunteer company or association, about being mustered into service; or being mustered into service, to in-duce or endeavor to persuade them to abandon or withdraw from the same. Every resident of Pennsylvania, who is protected by its laws, must abstain from uttering, writing or printing anything with the view and purpose, or which may have the effect of preventing others from entering the armies of the State or nation, or may induce others already entered to desert their colors and abandon the service. We all most highly prize the liberty of speech and freedom of press, yet at a time like this, when great ca lamities may be impending over the nation, the rules of morality, our allegiance and duty alike require that we shall abstain from doing any act or uttering any word or sentiment calculated to show that our councils are divi ded, whereby the hand of the enemy is strengthened and that of the government is weakened, and such act is well calculated to give aid and comfort to the enemy : and writing, printing or advised speaking before the people against the action of the national government, directly tends to induce those in the service to leave it, and those about to en ter to change their intentions. Persons vio lating these plain duties may readily bring themselves within the penalty of the law; and if the Grand Jury, or any one of them. know of this statute having been transgressed it is their bounden duty to present the trangressors, so that they may receive punish ment according to their demerits. -----
