Lewistown, January 1, 1862.

Patrons and Friends, another year Has gone to join the shadowy train That fills the kingdom of the past, Since last you heard your Carrier's strain, Which welcomed it with hearty cheer, Weeping the while the vanished year, Its hope and joy, its grief and wrong, At once a dirge, and cradle song! Twelve fleeting months of days and nights, Of golden suns, and silver lights, Have wrought their change of good and ill, But let the Carrier faithful still, Ready to serve you as at first, Though Governments like bubbles burst.

Reward him then for what he brings, And hearken to the song he sings; It is not long, it shall be clear, As suits the history of the year. It was the custom heretofore, To paint the changes of the time, Making the seasons come and go, Like pageants in his pictured rhyme. Old Winter like a crownless King, And like a maid, the tender Spring; Summer, a ripe, luxurious dame, Her sunny forehead bound with leaves; And Autumn in his broad domain, A reaper with his golden sheaves!

To-day demands a different strain, A wider range, a deeper thought, That shall reflect the moral year, Where man was mighty, nature naught. It was a memorable year, That will appear on history's page Among the foremost blazoned there, Perhaps an epoch of the age! What see we on the crowded stage, A tragedy, or comic play? Both, blent in one, with many scenes, Too many to revive to day. Select we then from out the mass, What best shall represent the year: A scene or two; the first is set, The proper actors will appear.

A year ago, when traitors ruled, In "democratic" name, All saw our destiny was lost, Our honor and our fame, Unless the people in their might Rose up in all their power, And hurl'd the villains to the earth, As demons of the hour.

So stood the country, when the man The people had elected, Rose up and in bold voice proclaimed, "The traitors are detected."

Behold! The patriot band who stood On Sumter's towering wall, Where waved the banner of the free, Upheld by one and all. Few were they who by it stood,

But hearts and hands were true, And would have shed their best blood Ere yielding to the traitor crew. Then hunger came, but still they fought As freemen only fight, Nerved on by men like Anderson

Who battle for the right; And only when all hope was gone Came down that glorious flag, And in its place a "snake" unfurled-Carolina's dirty rag.

Fast flew the news o'er hill and dale, Through gorge and mountain glen, And in answer to the call came forth Six hundred thousand men. A few with TORY look and word, The patriot tide would stay, But the people frown'd and said,

"Beware of what you say!" Still onward swelled the rebel host, Fighting for the Nigger cause, Regardless that to them it cost Peace, Liberty and Laws. And stranger still, while they profess'd, With sword, gun and trigger, To stay the "Abolition North," Every traitor freed a nigger

So passed the seasons, kind and bland, O'er fields of bloody strife. Which insane acts of rebel bands Have kindled into life. And many a home's made desolate By kindred now laid low, Who found a soldier's end and grave

Where Potomac's water's flow. Sad thought it is that this fair land, The refuge of the free, Should nourish such a hellish band-

Can it be Heaven's decree? If so, cheer up, for no free soil, Has felt the ills of war, But only those who wax and toil Slav'ry to spread afar.

"King Cotton" may call on its Lords. Bow down its pliant knee-All will be vain, the word is writ, AMERICA MUST BE FREE!

Then let England's proud Queen Beware of the day, When she marshals her legions In battle array 'Gainst freedom and right-Lest the Celt and the Gaul, The Russ and the Scott,

The Swiss and the Teuton With old feelings forgot, Rise up in their might, And under our Eagle-Proud bird of the sky-Lay low the foul despots With aid from on high.

May the curse of all freemen-May famine and blight-May war's desolation On all those alight, Who come, as comes England,

Like gambler or knave, To succor rebellion And the North to enslave. Down, down, with all party-Down with all strife-Let us arm with the rifle, The scythe, and the knife:

Let us first send the traitors, From Breck down to Bell, With Davis and Beauregard, To the confines of holl.

AGAIN

Bold Freemen await you With hearts in the right, Who planting their banner Where banner should be, to Your Interests

Will send forth the shout THE WORLD SHALL BE FREE! Glorious Triumph over all Opposition ! we offer to the public, For the People have Decided
