After electing Samuel Drake President, and also a Secretary, the assembly was entertained with a song by the ladics, adapted to the occasion, which was followed with prayer by Rev. J. H. S. Clark. The meeting was then addressed by Rev. J. H. McGarrah, who start-ed in his remedia by the ladics of the solution of the public of the solution of the solution of the solution of the solution of the public of the solution of the solution of the solution of the solution of the public of the solution of t ed in his remarks by saying that the import-ance of the temperance cause was the only reason he could present for urging it upon their attention at this time, when anxiety, with reference to our national difficulties oc cupies every mind. He said : While the evil spirit of rebellion is painting our streams red with the blood, and fattening our own native soil with the bodies of our kindred, there is another evil spirit dragging thousands of our fellows down to the silent halls of death. And while we spare no pains to crush the demon of secession, we should at the same time carry on a deadly warfare with the demon of in-He said the license system altemperance. ways had failed, and always would fail; that it had not in it the elements of success, but those of destruction. He closed his remarks on this point by saying "were I a limner, and requested to paint a design of the present Pennsylvania License System, I would paint a stately throne, and call it the throne of iniquity; on it I would have a landlord fattened the bread of the drunkard's family, and bloated on his own poison, until he was as big as Shakespeare's Falstaff; on his bead would have a crown of bottles-the proper insignia of his office-and on both sides I'd paint the poor, the haggard, the woe begone, the ragged and the wan, pleading for rum. In an outside circle I would paint the wretched and distressed kindred, pleading with the unfortunate ones to abandon their downward and hellward course, and if it were possible I would paint their groans and sighs, as they ascend to heaven, and enter into the ears of the Lord God who pitieth them, I would take the sad picture to Harrisburg, during a ses-sion of the Legislature, and holding it up be-fore them I would ask—in the name of God would ask-whether at the sight of it they
