ROBIN IS WEeping.

BY E. CASPER.
The robin is weeping, my baby dear;
Wee, sweet baby, wee to me!
Mine eyes is dim with the swelling tear;
My heart is big with a new-born fear.
Lest the little bird weeps for thee.
Wee, wee, wee, the robin is weeping.
Weary, oh weary the daytime wore;
The mother is weeping, 'tis so to me!
Now the house-dog howls outside the door;
Again he howls, and my heart is sore,
'Tis the death-howl, babe, for thee.
Wee, wee, wee, the robin is weeping.

The robin is weeping upon the wall,
And a tiny new-made grave I see.
The sexton has been with a little black pall;
Four mounds in white—fair, sad and tall—
Are bearing it tenderly.
Wee, wee, wee, the robin is weeping.
The robin is now on the garden gate;
The mother is weeping, 'tis so to me!
Her husband's mourning their childless state,
'O God! it is hard to suffer our fate,
God help us to bear it! cries he.
Wee, wee, wee, the robin is weeping.

THERE'S A BEAUTIFUL LAND.

There's a beautiful land on high,
To its glories I fain would fly—
When by sorrows pressed down, I long for my crown,
In that beautiful land on high.
In that beautiful land I'll be,
From earth and its cares set free;
My Jesus is there, he's gone to prepare
A place in that land for me.
There's a beautiful land on high,
I shall enter it by and by;
There, with friends, hand in hand, I shall walk on the strand,
In that beautiful land on high.
There's a beautiful land on high,
And my kindred its bliss enjoy;
When death is the way to the realms of day,
In that beautiful land on high.
There's a beautiful land on high,
And my kindred its bliss enjoy;
When death is the way to the realms of day,
In that beautiful land on high.
There's a beautiful land on high,
Where we never shall see, 'god be true,
When over the river we're happy forever,
In that beautiful land on high.

MISCELLANY.

ALINE RAY.

Aline Ray sat by the fire one cold December evening, her shivering feet upon a low stool, and her thin hands folded as she gazed dreamily at the glowing embers. She was not young, neither had Time dealt unkindly with her. A few threads of silver glistened in her hair, once so dark in its glossy beauty, showing that the fleeting hours had marked some sorrowful passages in her life's history. But the glossy tresses rippled over a brow as fair, and shad eyes as beautiful in their softened light as, when a girl, she moved among her companions the guest of the gay.

The cold blast whirled dismally around the streets, and tried angrily to force a way into that cozy little sitting-room, but all in vain. The cold sleet dashed violently against the shutters, and the leafless boughs of the old elm tree before the door rattled warningly over the heads of the few pedestrians who were of necessity compelled to be out in the dismal streets.

If the storming quid had but glanced into the room where Aline sat, there would have been ample reason for his angry mood, afforded in the contrast between his own dominion and one exposed to this view. And so thought a poor shivering mortal who crept for shelter into the deep doorway, and, more fortunate than the rude blast had been, heard the low music of a soft voice, chanting a song that seemed to come laden with sweet memories to the ear of the listener, for she coughed low in the deep shadow, and sobbed bitterly, while the tears seemed to freeze on her cheeks.

Of what was the solitary woman in the cheerful parlor thinking? Every note of the dear old song she was singing was fraught with a dream of the Past. And as she sang familiar faces looked at her from the glowing embers. The old arm chair in the corner was filled with a portly figure and benevolent countenance, shaded with thin white hair, the low rocking chair close by holds another form, slight and fragile, bent in form, and smoothly banded hair over her time-furrowed forehead, yet bearing traces in her countenance of great beauty; other shadowy figures glide out from the secret corners, and fit noiselessly round in the fitful firelight; a brother, fond sisters, friends—the dearly loved ones gone before! All who had made life pleasant and beautiful to her had taken that long journey, and had crossed the dark river, leaving her alone and mourning upon the earthly shore. 'Ah! if it only had been so!' she was thinking to herself. 'If I could only know that she was not suffering or in want!' And as she said thus to herself, she shuddered, for she fancied, as the heavy gusts of wind shook the window, that she heard a low sharp cry of agony.

Some years ago she had a fair young sister, her darling, and the pet and pride of her old parents' hearts. Beautiful as a dream, artless as a child—to know her was to love her. And they feared that she was too beautiful to live—this child of earth. Ah! if she had only died, ere grief for her had borne the loving hearts of the old folks to the gates of death, and brought desolation and care into one of the fairest and happiest homes upon earth! There had been the old story—a handsome and most fascinating stranger had won the heart of the innocent girl; and then, tears, expostulations, threats, commands—all given with a loving severity—yet all in vain. One bright winter morning the loved one was gone—had fled from the old homestead, leaving those who had given her life—and who had thought nothing in life too beautiful or too good for her—for the arms of a stranger. They had heard nothing of her for a long time, and then came news from a foreign land, of uncertain sort—a few timid words begging for forgiveness, asking to see the dear old home, with every now and then a sentiment of fear or terror evident in the tremulous lines. Then after a short period, more distressing news—a wife ill-treated, then deserted, and then claimed again, only to be obliged to follow the fortunes of a dissipated and brutal husband. But ere this last bitter news had reached them the two loving old folks had found their perfect rest. Through long and checkered years they had traveled life together, and in death they would not be divided.

As these thoughts crowded into the mind of Aline, the coals dropped from their places in the grate, and the shadowy phantoms that filled the room passed into the empty space, as a sound from the street reached her ears. It sounded so like a human cry. It must be fancy, she thought, and tried to call back the lost shadows. She could not compose herself again. Her thoughts clung with a strange tenacity to the fate of her young sister. What would she not give to see her now—to bear her footsteps in the silent room, and listen to her voice making music in the house that she had alone been mistress of so long.

Suddenly she started to her feet. Surely there was a cry—a low, agonizing wail, making itself heard in the pause of the storm. The wide hall was reached at a bound—a step and the door was opened wide to the shrieking wind. A human form—a woman—lay upon the doormat, apparently quite insensible. The sufferer was speedily conveyed into the house—into the cozy sitting room, which was now lighted with a brighter glow than from the firelight; and the old-fashioned sofa was wheeled close to the fire, while willing and busy hands essayed to bring back life to the poor creature's frozen form.

Aline stooped to unfasten the wanderer's thin frock, and as she did so a small gold locket was exposed to view. Why did she start as she looked at the face mirrored therein? She threw herself by the insensible form, and rained kisses upon her, as she sobbed rather than said, 'O Lord, I thank Thee for this great blessing! My sister, oh, my darling sister! the lamb which was lost and is found again!' And so she passed from prayers of thanksgiving to expressions of joy, until the light of life dawned in the eyes of the unfortunate wanderer, and their lips met in mutual caress.

A long story was that which Aline listened to the next day—gloomy and sad; but when it was ended, she brushed out her sister's long golden curls, twining them over her fingers as of old, and gazing down in the liquid blue eyes, radiant with a new light of hope and peace, said softly, 'There is only us two, my sister, and though we have both seen sorrow and waded through grief, yet can we now live a new life in each other.'

The old homestead grew more cheerful than before, and the two fair ladies who owned it and made its adornments their pleasure and pride, were beloved and honored by every one who came within the circle of their lives.

I might go farther, and tell of a night when the old house was brilliantly lighted, and many guests assembled to see a lovely woman in the prime of life pledge her faith to a noble man—and how through all the changes of life that had yet come the sisters were never separated; and though thankful to God for all his mercies, yet mourned together for those gone before, sighing 'for the touch of a vanished hand,' and listening 'for the sound of a voice that is dead.'

Baptizing a Sinner.

Poor people have a hard time in this world of ours. Even in matters of religion there is a vast difference between Lazarus and Dives, as the following anecdote, copied from an exchange, will illustrate:
Old Billy G— had attended a great revival, and in common with many others he was 'converted' and baptised.—Not many weeks afterwards, one of his friends met him reeling home from the court grounds with a considerable brick in his hat. 'Hello, Uncle Billy,' said the friend, 'I thought you had joined the church?' 'So I did,' answered Uncle Billy, making a desperate effort to stand still; 'so I did Jeemes, and would a bin a good Baptist, if they hadn't treated me so everlastin' mean at the water. Didn't you hear about it, Jeemes?' 'Never did.' 'Then I'll tell you 'bout it. You see when we come to the baptizin' place, thar was old Jinks, the rich old Squire, was to be dipped at the same time. Well, the Minister took the Squire in first; but I didn't mind that much, as I thought it would be just as good when I cum; so he led him in, and after dippin' him under, raised him up mitey keerful, and wiped his face and led him out. Then came my turn; and instead of lettin' me out, as he did the Squire, he gave me one sash, and let me crawling around on the bottom like a big mud turtle!

A boy with ragged trousers and rimless chip hat, runs into Dr. Willard's store with a dipper in his hand: 'Doctor, mother sent me down to shotecary pop, quicker'n blazes, coz bub's sick as the dickens with the pipe chox, and she wants a thimbleful of polygolic in this tipper, coz we hadn't bot a bottle handy, and the kint pup's got the bine witters in.' Got any?

A Chapter of News.

The Union Pacific railway is now completed from Wyandotte to Topeka, Kansas.

One hundred and seventy-two surgeons and assistant surgeons comprise the medical staff of the regular army.

The select committee on reconstruction have had a meeting, but have not transacted any important business.

The commission appointed some time since, to revise the revenue laws, have almost prepared their report.

The restrictions heretofore imposed upon the Episcopal churches in Alabama have been withdrawn.

Intelligence received at the freedmen's bureau represents that the small-pox has abated among the colored people in Georgia.

Russ, who shot a girl in New York because she would not marry him, and then attempted to commit suicide, died on the 3d inst.

Mrs. Schriff, wife of the postmaster of Chicago, died suddenly on New Year's day, whilst receiving the calls of her friends.

There is a great deal of snow on the plains, and many of the animals have been lost. Several teamsters are reported to have frozen to death.

The business of the pension bureau has been quite heavy during the past month. Four thousand five hundred have been examined, and eighty-four thousand yet remain.

An application has been made by the former owner of the steamer Planter, captured at Charleston by the colored pilot, Robert Small, to have his vessel restored to him. Give him a rope.

Senor Romero, the Mexican Minister, was not treated with coolness at the President's reception on January 1st. The French Minister, however, did not officially recognize him.

Nine million five hundred thousand dollars of prize money has already been paid by the Government, and it is estimated that five million five hundred thousand dollars are still unpaid.

Secretary McCulloch has just issued his monthly statement of the public debt for December. The aggregate is $2,814,310,357.99. The amount of debt, less cash in Treasury, is $2,716,581,536.19.

A person named J. H. Maddox has commenced a suit against the Secretary of War for false imprisonment. The complainant, it seems, purchased a quantity of tobacco in Richmond, alleging to have the authority of the President and Secretary of the Treasury. The tobacco was afterwards destroyed, and he was kept in the Old Capitol prison until the accession of President Johnson. He lays his damages at one hundred thousand dollars. The defence claims that he traded with the enemy, in violation of the article of war, and that he is still on parole, and under bonds to await trial on that charge.

On Monday the Wisconsin Legislature met. Governor Fairchild delivered an inaugural, taking strong grounds on national questions. He says:
'Any attempt to right grievances by force of arms is treason.
'Not until Jefferson Davis shall have been tried, convicted, and hung for treason and the fact that treason is a crime which cannot be committed with impunity, shall have thus been fully demonstrated, will the American people be content.
'The American people have demonstrated that the Union is one and indivisible—that its people, of whatever race or color, shall be forever free.'

THE QUAKER CITY BUSINESS COLLEGE

N. E. cor. Tenth and Chestnut Streets. PHILADELPHIA.

THE most complete and thoroughly appointed Business or Commercial College in the country.

The only one in the city possessing a Legislative Charter, and the only one in the United States authorized to confer Degrees of Merit. Diplomas awarded to graduates in the Commercial Course under its corporate seal by authority of law.

Conducted by gentlemen of liberal education and extensive experience in business, and affording unequalled advantages for the thorough theoretical and practical education of young men for the various duties and employments of business life.

THEORY AND PRACTICE COMBINED by a system of ACTUAL BUSINESS TRAINING original and pre-eminently practical, giving the student in the shortest time a complete insight into the routine, details, customs and forms of business in general, as conducted in the best-regulated commercial and financial establishments.

Theoretical Bookkeeping Upon a new plan, with an original exposition of the science of accounts, arranged and published by the proprietor of this Institution exclusively for his own use, saving one-half the ordinary labor of the student, and giving him a complete knowledge of the practice of the best accountants.

The Commercial Course Bookkeeping, Commercial Arithmetic, Pennsylvania Business Correspondence, Commercial Law, Letters on Business Affairs, Commercial Customs, Forms and Actual Business Practice.

Special Branches. Algebra and the Higher Mathematics, Phonography, or Commercial Penmanship, the Art of Detecting Counterfeit Money, Engineering, Surveying, Navigation and Telegraphy.

Telegraphing The arrangements for Telegraphing are far in advance of anything of the kind ever offered to the public. A regular Telegraph Line is connected with the Institution, with twenty branch offices in various parts of the city, where public business is transacted, and in which the students of this Institution are permitted to practice. No regular office practice can be had in any other school of instruction in the country, without which no one can obtain a position as a practical operator. Young men are cautioned against the deceptive representations of those who, without any such facilities, pretend to teach Telegraphing.

Patronage. This Institution is now enjoying the largest patronage ever bestowed upon any commercial school in the State. Over five hundred students were in attendance the first year, and over seven hundred during the past year. The best class of students may invariably be found here, and all its associations are financially sound.

Location and Accommodations. The Institution is located in the most central part of the city, and its accommodations, for extent, elegance and convenience, are unsurpassed. All the rooms have been fitted up in the very best style with BUSINESS OFFICES OF CONTRACTING HOUSES, TELEGRAPH OFFICES, STATIONERY STORE AND A REGULAR BANK OF DEPOSIT AND ISSUE, supplied with finely-engraved lithographic notes used as a circulating medium in the Department of Actual Business.

To Young Men who desire the very best facilities for a Practical Education for Business, we guarantee a course of instruction no where else equaled, while the reputation and standing of the Institution among business men make its endorsement the best passport to success and advancement. All contemplating entering any Commercial College, are invited to send for an

Illustrated Circular and Catalogue, containing complete interior views of the College, and full particulars of the course of instruction, terms, &c. L. FAIRBANKS, A. M., President. T. C. SEARCH, Special Teacher and Sup't. of Office Business. Nov. 5, 65, 17
