The combination of mind and matter in man, is not more wonderful than the wide difference in respect to the proper nourishment of each. Not until after the first few years of healthy growth of the body, by means of sleep, food and exercise, does the proper time arrive for the gradual unfolding of the mind by systematic training.

Just at this critical point two grievous mistakes are often made by injudicious teaching. The child is either treated as if his brain was a receptacle large enough to contain all the disusceptible of proper stimulus at first, becomes, by neglecting to lay a solid base for its symmetrical rearing, a hol- 628. low, disjointed, unsteady shamble; over the miserable framework of which, the outside polish is applied that a passable appearance may be made in the

Of course, the teacher must be prepared for this and I know from personal experience the incalculable aid this plan gives in acquiring general information.

A verbal description is remembered much longer by the pupil, than the same would be if he were required to commit it to memory. I have often wished for a book that would give the following the follo same would be if he were required to brief detached accounts of celebrated Chairs, Lounges, marble top Tables, with a ern times.
