EDUCATIONAL.

J. K. HABTZLER, Belleville, Miffin County, Editor.

For the Educational Column. Variety in Thought. The word man when traced back to the farthest glimmerings of its history is found to have its origin in a rootword which signifies a thinker. Not only by the primary signification of his name, however, but by the design of his Creator, man is constituted a thinker. Hence those who confine their thoughts to the limited range of topics suggested by the routine of their occupation and matters connected with their domestic arrangements and wants are apt to make a miserable failure in life, not a failure so far as physical subsistence is concerned, but a crimi nal failure in what relates to the culture of mind and heart. The variety of faculty and susceptibility with which God has endowed man in his intellect. ual, social and religious nature ally him on one side to the angels above him, on the other to the angels below him. He who, like Bunyan's man with in gathering up the perishable things about him that he fails to see the shining prizes just above him, and he who would feed his soul with metaphysics, or indeed with any one kind of aliment, alw must be egregiously one-sided. One delves and lives down among the bogs of self-interest and appetite, an utter stranger to the pure joys that come from the sublime sweeps of imagination, while the other soars among devious clouds unwilling to recognize the sober realities of his social and religious being. Let the idea, then, be deeply impressed upon the mind that no one can be healthy and well balanced in thought and feeling whose thoughts all centre about one idea or one class of ideas. Some men are excellent tradesmen and artizans, but nothing more; their thoughts and energies are all expended in their "line of business," leaving no time nor inclination for the culture of their higher powers. Sometimes a woman may be found who is a model housekeeper-which is an accomplishment by no PHOTOGRAPH ALBURS. means to be disparaged-but nothing above and beyond that. Much happier, much more useful might such characters be did they daily rest their minds and reinvigorate and balance their thoughts by reading and thinking upon subjects outside of and altogether different from the uniform routine of daily life. The teacher who concerns himself only about what relates to his school and the branches he teaches -a sort of walking book-worm. (if worms can be said to walk), full of puzzling problems, knotty sentences, and other bookish conceits which he delights to push at you whenever and wherever he can, may be a moderately successful teacher, but he is nothing more, he cannot be said to be "a man H tablishment a new supply of among men." he is a mere thing-a machine. So the farmer who thinks only of crops, soil, manures, markets and cattle, he may become rich bat his life will be a miserable failure. H.
