MISCELLANY.

A Singular Bream.

The velocity of thought while a person is dreaming is a phenomenon which has often excited the attention of philosophers. The best illustration of it which we have ever seen is the follow. ing account of a dream of Count Lavalette. At the time of its occurrence Lavalette was in prison under sentence of death, which had been passed upon him for his conduct during the 'Han dred Days:'

One night as I was asleep, the clock of the Palais de Justice struck twelve and awoke me. I heard the gate open to relieve the sentry, but I fell asleep again immediately. In this sleep I dreamed that I was standing in the Rue St. Honore, at the corner of the Rue de l'Echelle. A melancholy darkness spread around me; all was stillnevertheless a low and uncertain sound arose.

All of a sudden I perceived at the Sugar, from

Merchants, Mechanics, Farmers, House-eepers and Dealers get erally may rely upon bottom of the sreet, and advan toward me, a troop of cavalry; the men held torches in their hands, the red flames of which illuminated faces without skin and bloody muscleshollow eyes rolled fearfully in their large sockets; their mouths opened from ear to ear, and helmets of hanging flesh covered their hideous heads. Their horses dragged along their own skins in the kennels, which overflowed with blood on both sides. Pale and disheveled women appeared and disappeared alternately at the windows in dismal silence; low and inarticulate groans filled the air, and I remained in the streets alone, petrified with horror, and deprived of strengths ufficient to seek my satety in flight. This horrible troop continued passing in a rapid gallop, and casting frightful looks on me.

Their march, I thought, continued for five hours, and they were followed by an immense number of artillery wagons, full of bleeding corpses, whose limbs still quivered; a disgusting smell of blood and bitumen almost choked me. At length the iron gates of the prison shutting with great force awoke me again. I made my repeater strike; so that the horrible phantasmagoria had lasted no more than two or three minutes-that is to say, the time necessary for relieving the sentry and shutting the gate. The cold was sovere and the watch word was short. The next day the turnkey confirmed my calculations. 1 nevertheless do not remember a single event in my life, the duration of which the details are deeper engraved on my nemory, and of which I preserve a more perfect consciousness 4000 * A correspondent tells of a chap who was drinking at a counter, and withal being tolerably tight, after several attempts to raise the glass to his lips succeeded in getting it high enough to pour the contents inside the shirt collar, and set the glass down with the exclamation : 'That's good, but a little too much ice; Mr. Bar keeper."

'I think,' said a wife who could not agree with her husband, 'I think, Mr. Sibbs, we had better divide the house. You shall live on one side and I on the other.' 'Very well, my dear,' replied he, 'you take the outside, and I'll have the inside."
