The Surratt Trial.

Judge Fisher, in charging the jury in this case, touched on general matters as follows: GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY: 'Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed.' So spake the Almighty to his servant Noah, when the great deluge had receded and the ark had safely rested upon the boly summit of Mount Ararat. This is God's own law, and its wisdom is acknowledged by all civilized nations. Now and then we meet with sentimental philosophers who think themselves wise above what is written, and who deem it their duty to lift up their voices in condemnation of this flat of Jebovah, and although they have made but few thorough converts to their pernicious doctrines, they not unfrequently succeeded in creating in the minds of honest and tender hearted people a vitiated sentimentalism which leads them too often to sout their ears to the stern voice of justice, and listen only to the gentle, kindly whisperings of mercy, forgetting that mercy to the guilty is injustice to the innocent. With such sentimentality you have, as jurors, nothing to do. It is no matter of yours to inquire whether the prisoner at the bar is a proper subject of Executive elemency, if you believe him guilty of participa ting in the crime with which he stands charged before you, but simply to determine his guilt or innocence.
