THE DEACON'S RIDE. In a village not far from Cleveland the following incident happened : Tom Dand Bill W ---- were two wild boys, who delighted in mischief. One evening, while walking through the village, they saw an old sow rooting quietly in the street. This | casion. sow they drove quietly toward the village church, which stood on a slight elevation in the center of the hamlet. When they arrived here, Bill, by some means, opened the church, and with their united exertions they got the sow safely in, then relocked the door. Soon the sow commenced a loud rumpus in the church among the seats and chairs. When the boys heard this, they ran through the village shouting that a ghost was in the church. Soon nearly all the inhabitants of the village were assembled before the edifice, from the inside of which a great noise proceeded. It happened that the minister was absent that evening, and so it became the duty of Deacon Gray to open the out of an open window in the Criminal church to see what caused the noise. The deacon was not one of the brayest men, and it took considerable coaxing to make him proceed with the investigation. Slowly he walked up to the door, while the crowd kept in the background; more slowly he unlocked the door, then after some hesitation he opened it : but no sooner had he done so than out came the old | sow, a large one of her species, passing directly between the legs of our Deacon, which were none of the longest, who fell astride of the old sow with his face toward her rear. Clutching her tail tightly with both hands, he rode, as fast as the frightened porker could go, through the crowd of astonished, dumbfounded, gaping vil-lagers, exclaiming as he sped along, in a loud, stentorian voice, "Oh, good Lord ! send my best respects to my family, for Satan has got ahold of me and is taking
