LANCASTER, JUNE 25th, 1868.
Having Examined Dr. Wm. M. Whiteside, the undersigned being a student of the art, and a large stock of teeth and all the fixtures, the instruments formerly belonging to me, and also those used by my father, Dr. Farry, in his practice. In the purchase, he does not intend to deprive himself with some of the most valuable and expensive instruments used in dental practice, he has beyond doubt one of the best and largest collections of teeth and instruments in the State. Persons visiting the commodious offices of Dr. W. M. Whiteside, cannot fail to be fully accommodated. The Doctor allows no opportunity of furnishing himself with every late scientific improvement in his line of business.

Poetry.
THREE WORDS OF STRENGTH.
BY SCHILLER.
There are three lessons I would write—
Three words as with a burning pen,
In tracings of eternal light,
Upon the hearts of men.
Have Hope! Though clouds environ round,
And gladness hides her face in scorn,
Put then the shadow from thy brow—
No night but hath its morn.
Have Faith! Wh'er thy bark is driven—
The calm'st diport, the tempest's mirth—
Know this: God rules the hosts of Heaven.
The inhabitants of earth.
Have Love! not love alone for one,
But man as man thy brother call,
And scatter, like the circling sun,
Thy charities on all.
Thus grave these lessons on thy soul—
Hope, Faith and Love—and thou shalt find
Bright when life's surges rudest roll,
Light when thou else wert blind.

Miscellaneous.
THE BLACKSMITH OF ANTWERP;
OR,
The Reward of Genius.
They were seated in a rich and shady arbor, over which the creeping vines wandered in every variety of curve, suspending large clusters of precious fruits, while the atmosphere was laden with the mellow fragrance of the gorgeous plants which grew in wild untutored luxuriance about the shadowy retreat. The fading light of day yet lingered and gave a rosy hue to the face of the maid who sat therein, as she regarded with mournful tenderness the youth seated at her side.
"Nay, Quintin," said she, "say not so; it is feeling which actuates me—it is feeling which prompts me to say—it must not be. Had I not feeling for my father, do you believe I would act contrary to my own desires—would cause you unhappiness?"
"Is this your love?" said the other with a tone of fretfulness. "Methinks it cannot be a very ardent flame when it is so easily extinguished by the perverse and obstinate tyranny of a—"
"Stay your words," interrupted she, as she laid her delicate hand tenderly on his lips. "You will respect the father if you esteem his child."
The noble mind of the youth was struck with the reproof, and although it was adverse to his desires, her filial obedience told of so much pure and holy excellence that he instantly made reparation.
"Forgive me, dearest," he entreated. "I spoke hastily and unworthy of myself. But your words have crazed my soul, which builds its happiness on the possession of you. If it may not be that I shall be your husband, oh promise me that no other shall!"
"I would feign do so," sighed the afflicted virgin, "but if my father commands, can I disobey? I have had no mother's care since childhood, but I have scarce felt the loss, he has thrown by the coldness of a man and been a very woman in his affection for me. Shall I repay his kindness with ingratitude? Alas! Quintin if he tells me to love another I cannot do so, but if he bids me wed—Quintin you would not enslave me?"
The expiring rays of the setting sun fell on her features as she earnestly glanced upon her lover.
"Ah," cried the youth with a sudden start, as he struck his hand upon his brow, "Why that blush, that agitation? Deceive me not, Eliza, you are not supposing a case. This has already happened. I see it all. He has selected a bridegroom."
The maid sunk her head upon his bosom, and through her struggling tears she sobbed—
"Quintin, thou hast said it."
Desperate was the conflict in the bosom of the youth as he sat like one in a trance, his eyes fixed on hers, which like the sun breaking through the clouds of the passing storm, gleamed from under their dripping lashes, and soon he saw the rainbow of hope.
"Who is my rival?" he asked with a voice scarce audible.
"Van Deg," she answered, sorrowfully.
"Do you love him, Eliza?"
"How can you ask?"
"Will you marry him?"
"My father's happiness is dearer to me than my own. Think you I would willingly sacrifice it?"
"But why Van Deg?"
"Because he excels in my father's art."
"Alas!" cried the despairing lover, "why had I not been a painter?"

"Forgive me, dearest," he entreated. "I spoke hastily and unworthy of myself. But your words have crazed my soul, which builds its happiness on the possession of you. If it may not be that I shall be your husband, oh promise me that no other shall!"
"I would feign do so," sighed the afflicted virgin, "but if my father commands, can I disobey? I have had no mother's care since childhood, but I have scarce felt the loss, he has thrown by the coldness of a man and been a very woman in his affection for me. Shall I repay his kindness with ingratitude? Alas! Quintin if he tells me to love another I cannot do so, but if he bids me wed—Quintin you would not enslave me?"
The expiring rays of the setting sun fell on her features as she earnestly glanced upon her lover.
"Ah," cried the youth with a sudden start, as he struck his hand upon his brow, "Why that blush, that agitation? Deceive me not, Eliza, you are not supposing a case. This has already happened. I see it all. He has selected a bridegroom."
The maid sunk her head upon his bosom, and through her struggling tears she sobbed—
"Quintin, thou hast said it."
Desperate was the conflict in the bosom of the youth as he sat like one in a trance, his eyes fixed on hers, which like the sun breaking through the clouds of the passing storm, gleamed from under their dripping lashes, and soon he saw the rainbow of hope.
"Who is my rival?" he asked with a voice scarce audible.
"Van Deg," she answered, sorrowfully.
"Do you love him, Eliza?"
"How can you ask?"
"Will you marry him?"
"My father's happiness is dearer to me than my own. Think you I would willingly sacrifice it?"
"But why Van Deg?"
"Because he excels in my father's art."
"Alas!" cried the despairing lover, "why had I not been a painter?"

The Reward of Genius.
They were seated in a rich and shady arbor, over which the creeping vines wandered in every variety of curve, suspending large clusters of precious fruits, while the atmosphere was laden with the mellow fragrance of the gorgeous plants which grew in wild untutored luxuriance about the shadowy retreat. The fading light of day yet lingered and gave a rosy hue to the face of the maid who sat therein, as she regarded with mournful tenderness the youth seated at her side.
"Nay, Quintin," said she, "say not so; it is feeling which actuates me—it is feeling which prompts me to say—it must not be. Had I not feeling for my father, do you believe I would act contrary to my own desires—would cause you unhappiness?"
"Is this your love?" said the other with a tone of fretfulness. "Methinks it cannot be a very ardent flame when it is so easily extinguished by the perverse and obstinate tyranny of a—"
"Stay your words," interrupted she, as she laid her delicate hand tenderly on his lips. "You will respect the father if you esteem his child."
The noble mind of the youth was struck with the reproof, and although it was adverse to his desires, her filial obedience told of so much pure and holy excellence that he instantly made reparation.
