THURSDAY EVENING, JAN. 22, 1880.
The Dickens Reaction.
There is an evident reaction of feeling about Dickens, as there was in Scotland a reaction which in the case of Scott, is only now subsiding. The Dickens reaction dates from the publication of his life by Mr. Foster, and it has been hastened by the recent issue of his letters. Despite his excellent and American Notes, the admiration of Dickens seems to flag in this country, and with characteristic ardor the feeling of his genius was extended to his personality. Of this, however, he was never aware, as is curiously shown by an interchange of notes between Mr. Dickens and Mr. Delane, the late editor of the London Times. Mr. Jennings, who was the former editor of the New York Times, and who is now the London correspondent of the World, was professionally a pupil of Mr. Delane, and was trained upon the Times. Upon a visit to England in 1867 Mr. Jennings was told by Mr. Delane that Mr. Dickens declined to go to America to read because he feared he might be "tarred and feathered," or receive some equally impressive mark of American disfavor.
Mr. Jennings laughed, and replied that Mr. Dickens had a misconception of his American popularity; that our goods have not so universally known and quoted and liked; that even the Notes and Chuzzlewit were not excluded; and that he might be sure of a hearty welcome. A few days afterwards he received a note from Mr. De-lane, who said that in conversation about Dickens had resulted in the note that he enclosed, which was a note from Dickens stating that what Mr. Jennings had said, as reported to him by Mr. Delane, had led him to decide to come to America, and he had telegraphed accordingly.

The extraordinary popularity of his readings here, the singularly courteous and friendly tone of the press, the manner in which his desire of personal seclusion during his visit was respected, and the warmth of the farewell dinner of the press to him at Delmonico's, must have been to the surprise and even resentment which had been felt after his return home from his early visit were not so great as our admiration for his genius. Indeed, except for his deep conviction of this fact he would have hardly appeared at the dinner, for he was suffering severely and could walk only with great difficulty, when at last, after an hour's delay, he came into the room with Mr. Greeley, who presided.
The kind recantation of his old opinions which he made in his speech at the dinner and his touching and graceful and reading of his Christmas story, and the readings of two evenings afterwards at Steinway hall was very pathetic. The reason of the reaction probably is the conviction that he was not the man we supposed him to be, and this was first made apparent in a Life by Mr. Foster. This showed a man wholly interested in himself and seemingly valuing men and things mainly as they enabled him to display himself. Undoubtedly this must be said with reservation, because of the extraordinary exuberance of his expression. Whoever read his Christmas stories, or the Little Nell, or of Paul Dombey, felt that the writer must be a man of singular sincerity and generosity of heart—simple and earnest and gentle. There is no doubt of his own interest in his work, and he describes himself as suffering with the suffering of his characters, and his expression in writing the stories. But the impression of the writer which the writings produce is not justified by further knowledge.
However delightful a companion, however exploring his spirits, however flowing his humor, it is another matter to associate with him in writing the stories. But the impression of the writer which the writings produce is not justified by further knowledge.
