The Wages of Farm Labor.

Germantown Telegraph. This is the time of the year when labor on the farm is the question of the hour. It has been said that among the drawbacks to intelligent agriculture in our country is the uncertain tenure of the soil. The farmer who rents does nothing permanently be-cause he may leave the next year and the farmer who owns knows not at what moment he may sell. There are many who make a permanent business of the farm, but there are thousands who do not ; and these keep down the average of good cul-

But it seems to us if evanescent settling is an injury to farming, the frequent change of labor is at least as bad. The agricultural laborer, as a general thing, is employed for about nine months in the year. In the spring he is to be looked after, and before he is secured numberless little matters, which result in great mo-ment after awhile, are left undone till the help comes, when it is too late to do them properly for the best results for that

Where farms are large enough to afford it, and those who farm are engaged in a life pursuit, the best results have been found to follow from so managing as to have the help employed all the year round and all the better if such help be married, and can be comfortably domiciled in tenant houses on the ground. Advantage can thus be taken of every turn of good weather to get the work done at the proper moment, to the great benefit of the subsequent crop. Moreover a man regularly employed is likely to take more interest in his work than one who knows he is but temporary, and the employer has more chance to bear patiently with the man while both are learning one another's

There is besides the absolute question of labor at this season, another which always troubles one, namely, that one of wages. The carpenter for instance who gets in the city $2.50 to $3 per day, has to pay perhaps $16 or $18 per month for house-rent, while provisions of every kind have to be purchased, and often at high rates. Even the smallest scrap of fuel has to be bought. and there is nothing but what costs hard cash to get it. A hand on a farm, especially if he is comfortably tenanted, has less rent, less expense in provisions, and less demand on his wages in every way, and this should always enter into calculations as to the worth of services. Even when the single man is boarded in the family, it is still about the same. Sixteen dollars per month and board in a family on a farm is better for the hand than $1.50 without any other privileges, in a city, as any single young man who has tried the difference can readily testify to. It is not therefore a fair comparison be tween the actual cash of the city and the cash wages of the country. Nominally less, the result is generally greater, and this result should be the basis of calculations. There is no doubt, however, that we lose much by transitory labor, and it will be wise for all who can to make such ...rangements as will enable the laborer to e steadily employed the whole year.
