all powers of courts to punish, as contempts, publications out of courts he passed to the second subject of consideration-the rules to disbar. For the same reasons as before given, it was unsional fidelity in what occurred in court. It seemed to be admitted that there was none. Hence it was only necessary to examine the question as to whether a court be had power to summarily punish a lawyer, for an alleged libellous publication, made as an editor, concerning a case in which he was not interested in any professional way, and which was not pending nor undetermined.

Upon this most vital part of the case he adopted the line of argument above given and quoted from a most exhaustive brief. involving probably a hundred English and American authoritative judicial opinions.

In the course of his argument he said: "I claim that when I became a lawyer I did not lose a single right of citizenship. I claim it is my right outside of the court room to speak of any judge or court as any other citizen. If this were not so how powerless members of the bar would be in discussing the merits of aspirants to the judgeship. While ignorant editors or the meanest laymen could discuss this matter the lawyers best qualified to speak concerning and most deeply interested in it could make no criticism upon a corrupt or unfit judge, who aspired to re-election, lest they be arraigned at his bar and summarily stricken down in their profession.' Judge Patterson: It cannot be assumed that any criticism is meant in the authorities quoted except such as calls in question the integrity of the court. To ordinary criticism it is of course liable, but when its integrity is attacked its powers are larger.

Mr. Shapley: I will try and convince the court that it has no power even in such cases, beyond its presence, to punish officers of court, except as it may punish any other citizen. An attorney's office is his property not to be taken from him upon a charge made by a court, determined by a judge as complainant, prosecutor, court and jury, but only after a constitutional trial in which the offense shall be legally established.

In an eloquent and logical conclusion, Mr. Shapley dwelt upon the relations of bench and bar, and the importance to the led he has his remedy like all other citibench as well as to the bar of maintaining the independence of the attorney in his office. To establish the rule that he should be restricted where all others have freedom would be a stab at Justice, on her very altar by her own high priest. To deny to the great body of educated lawyers, most competent to judge of the fitness and integrity of the judiciary, the right to express their opinions of it, at the proper time and in the proper place, and when and where all other people have a right to express such opinion, would be a blow at the judiciary itself, and at the independence of the lawyer and the freedom of the press.

bar, Judge Patterson answered that newspapers too often discussed legal questions in a prejudiced and partisan manner. To which Mr. Shapley rejoined that such reports or comments were generally made by editors who were not lawyers. After the argument had been finished case and adjourned court until 21 p. m.

Novel Law.

Wilkesbarre Union-Leader. Judge Patterson's law, which holds a lawyer responsible as a lawyer for what he says as an editor, is novel law, and bad law. When a lawyer, who is also an editor, shall have been formally convicted of crimdisbarred. But a lawyer, who chooses to be an editor as well, has rights and responsibilities as a lawyer, and rights and responsibilities as an editor. What wrong he does as a lawyer he can be punished for as a lawyer. What wrong he does as an editor, he can be punished for as an editor. assume that he can be punished as a lawyer for what he does as an editor, and just as ridiculous as to assume that he can be punished as an editor for such violations of capacity as a member of the bar.

Contempt of Court. Philadelphia Press.

The case of Messrs. Steinman and Hensel, editors of the Lancaster Intelligen-CER and members of the Lancaster county bar, who have been ruled to show cause why their names should not be stricken from the list of attorneys, will be argued at Lancaster to-day. The respondents, in their paper, charged that certain acquittals before Judge Patterson were procured by "a prostitution of the machinery of justice," and intimated that the judge was a party thereto. This his honor considers a contempt of court, and he proposes to disbar the journalistic attorneys. The common law gave courts large discretionary powers to punish for contempt, but in this state their powers in that respect have been largely curtailed. It appears to be somewhat an open question, however, whether these laws are applicable to attorneys who, as officers of the court, occupy a relation to it distinct from other men, and whether the special authority of the court over the as attorneys will extend to them in their actions in a different sphere.

The law relative to contempt of court, and what does not fall within it, was exhaustively considered pro and con. in the impeachment trial of Judge Peck of the United States district court for the district of Missouri before the United States Senate in 1830. In this case one Luke E. Lawless, a practicing attorney in Judge Peck's court, published in a St. Louis paper a criticism of one of the judge's opinions, and enumerated eighteen separate errors in law or in fact into which he claimed the court had fallen. Judge Peck immediately cited the publishers of the paper before him to answer for contempt, but it appearing that Lawless was the author of the offending article, he was substituted, and subsequently sentenced to one day's imprisonment, and was suspended from practice at that court for eighteen months. On the plea that he was outraged and oppressed by this action of the court, Lawless memorialized the House of Representatives, but the judiciary committee, Daniel Webster, chairman, reported adversely on Darmstadt, notifying them to appear behis petition After Webster's transfer to the Senate George McDuffic of South Carolina took up the matter in behalf of Lawless, and finally the House voted to impeach Judge Peck for a high misdemeanor. | years past. If a decision is founded in error it can be re versed; if in corruption, the judges can be removed and punished, but to allege error and corruption before the public, or otherwise to denounce the judiciary, is but to invite a disregard of the law and the mandates of the court, and prompt men to set

Judge Patterson of Lancaster county has arrested the editors of the Lancaster In-TELLIGENCER, who both happen to be members of the bar, for editorial articles criticising his action as a judge. Though they published the article as editors, Judge Patterfon wishes to hold them responsible as lawyers for an infraction of the dignity of the court. It strikes us that his honor has done more to impair respect for his court by his arbitrary proceedings tlan could be done by all the newspaper articles that ever were written. Waked up tto Wrong Passenger. nocratic Sentinel, Kittanning, Pa.

A Judge Patterson, of Lancaster, has seen fit to take umbrage at the editors of the Intelligencer of that city for a criticism printed in that paper recently, in reference to the proper administration of ustice in Judge Patterson's quarter sessions court. His honor directed an order to issue to Messrs. Steinman and Hensel, the editors of the paper, who are also lawyers, to show cause, why they should not be stricken from the list of attorneys for contempt of court! Contempt of court. in criticising the acts of a district attorney and a judge of the court through a newspaper! This is an unparalleled procedure in a court of justice; and is not authorized either by the law or the constitution. On the contrary this very right is guaranteed by act of Assembly and the organic law. Judge Patterson must think himself the Czar of all the Lancasters and that attorneys have no rights and editors no privileges beyond that of vessals, that he in his supreme dignity is bound to respect. If Judge Patterson has been wrongzens. If he has been libeled let him prosecute for libel. If he has been slandered, let him sue for slander, just like other men, and let a jury of his countrymen determine the extent of the injury he has or may sustain from the publication of the proceedings in his court and the comments thereon. If he is simply mad, and wishes to vent his spleen upon the editors of the NTELLIGENCER he has "put his foot in " most effectually; and has evidently awakened up the wrong passengers."

The Price for February. PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 30.—The Lehigh coal exchange met here this afternoon. There was a large representation of operators and several members of the Schuylkill coal exchange present by invitation. After a lengthy discussion it was decided to make no change in line and city prices for February, except an advance of 25 cents per ton in furnace. It was contended that the iron trade was in the best condition to bear any increase in price which the market should warrant. The question of restricting production during the coming month was considered, and it was finally agreed to appoint a committee of three to confer with the Schuylkill trade upon that sub-
