A queer story is told of the Winter Palace of the Czar, which may be given as illustrating the great extent of the place, and the possibilities of mischief it affords. In the time of Nicholas, the father of the present Czar, a number of sentries were posted on the roof to guard against fire or foes. Finding the climate up there not altogether so comfortable as could be wished, this permanent watch at length contrived to convey on to the roof the materials for a number of huts or cabins, which in course of time they erected under the shelter of the chimney stacks. So snug and cozy did they manage to make themselves that it at length occurred to the married men among them that, as there was plenty of room up there, they might as well enlarge their establishments Accordingly wives and families, one after another, found their way out on to the imperial leads. Several of the single mem-bers of the guard, finding such a tempting opportunity of setting up housekeeping economically, took wives to themselves, and after a while quite a considerable colony had sprung up.

How far the development might have gone on if the individuals composing this parasitic little village had been reasonably cautious and careful in their behavior it is difficult to guess; but the establishment of families among the chimneys of the palace led gradually to the accumulation of domestic animals. Fowls multiply amazingly, and goats become numerous and flourish so well in the bracing atmosphere that at length it was suggested that a cow might conveniently be added to the farm stock. How the animal was elevated we are not informed, but it is stated as a fact that it was by some means hoisted to the roof, and was eventually the ruin of the community. The lowing of the cow came to certain official ears, and led to an investigation and the total breaking up of the queer society. Even at that time it is said that the Russian emperor felt so little confidence in his personal security that Gentlemen's Wear. nobody ever knew in which bedroom he was going to sleep. A large number was always kept ready and unoccupied, and at bedtime the Czar would quietly slip into one of them selected at the moment.

The Winter Palace is described as the largest palace in the world, being onethird larger than that of the Emperor of Austria, and unsurpassed in point of splendor. It is the residence of the Czar and his court during the winter, and stands on the left bank of the Neva, on the site of a house, which in the reign of Peter the Great belonged to his high admiral, Count Apraxin, who bequeathed it to Emperor Peter II. It was so completely destroyed by fire in 1837 that it was necessary to rebuild it, and one of the not least remarkable facts connected with it is that its present form was the work of two short years.

Custine gives a terrible description of the rise of this monstrous citadel. In order to complete the task at the time appointed by the Czar, the interior works were continued during the great frosts; and when the thermometer outside was 300 below zero of Reaumur, 6,000 workman were daily shut up in halls heated to 300 of r that the walls might dry the quicker; so that these poor wretches had to endure a difference of 60° of temperature. No wonder a considerable number of them died daily; and it is said that those who were engaged to paint the interior of the most heated halls were obliged to place on their heads a kind of bonnet of ice in order to preserve use of their senses under the burning tempera-
