An April 1st Incident in a New York News-paper Office. The Graphic says: The following dispatch was received at the office of one of our esteemed contemporaries on Thursday

CALCUTTA, April 1.—A dispatch just re-ceived from Cabul states that the Affridis have taken Umbrage.

The news editor read the cablegram two or three times but couldn't call to mind the place mentioned in it. He only seemed to recollect that the Affridis were a tribe of Afghans who had been more or less close allies of the British in the recent campaign. So, with a deep look, as though he knew all about the whole business, but had only time to dash off an edi-torial paragraph on the brightening prospects of the English army in and about the Khyber Pass, he passed the dispatch over to the particular member of the staff who has grown gray and emaciated in fretting over thousands of similar cable conundrums with a single remark: "Write that up quicker'n lightnin'."

The young man-for he is still young in years-took and tackled it. He looked at it sidewise, crosswise, lengthwise and then turned it over like a "fifteen" box, but couldn't get a cue for all he was so curious. There was nothing to be done but to moon over the map of Afghanistan once more. He spread out that attractive work of art upon his desk, bitterly brushing off the office cat which was asleep there with his nose on a bundle of proofs.

"Umbrage, Umbrage; wonder where in Hades Umbrage is anyhew. Seems to me I've heard of the blanked place, but can't remember where it's located to save my heartstrings from consuming fire. There's Jamrood, there's Jellalabad, Fetchabad, Himetabad, Sheillabed, Astarabad and all the other bads-and an eternal bad lot they are! Jugdulluck, Candahar, Ghuznai. Karagosh, Jeehar Gunbaz, Hangu, Singbest Kutty Sing, Shubzuar, Khiwajah Nurbruk, Kischi Nogud and all the other nasty, beastly and blamable holes ever invented by Satan and named by a stuttering idiot, but where Umbrage is I don't see. Um brage! Umbrage! 'Taint in the Khyber Pass, the Bamian Pass, the Jugdulluck Pass, or the Barraghil Pass. I'm be darned if I don't give it up as a Jellalabad job." So saying the baffled expert tossed the scrip on his superiors' table with the words

Enter W. U. telegraph boy. Boy-There's the tail o' that dispatch that was sent an hour ago. Editor tears open the envelope and -at the refusal of Sir Frederick Roberts to furnish extra rations on the anniversary of the birth of their great chief, Khaniff-Khan.

It was not until this moment that the editor looked at the date of the dispatch. It was April 1.
