found that it has been much reduced since the late report of the inspectors, while what is on hand, though not valued at "fabulous prices," we believe was overvalued in the report.

At the Children's Home, the matron, Mrs. Hamaker met us and conducted us through the building and gave us the following report of the inmates, 68 boys—24 girls (including one colored). Everything relating to this institution betokens efficiently the state of the institution betokens efficiency of the color of the institution betokens efficiency of the institution betokens efficiency of the institution betokens efficiency of the institution of the institution betokens efficiency of the institution of t cient management. The health of the in-mates is very good, there being at present not a single case of sickness. Mr. H. G. Book, foreman of the grand inquest, appropriately addressed the children.

We next visited the almshouse, which is under the management of Mr. John Brock, and found it to contain 216 inmates, 135 men, 54 women and 17 children. In the hospital, under the management of Major B. F. Cox, there are 237 inmates, 159 being in the insane department. Both institutions are neat and in excellent condition, and seem to be well managed.

In the late report of the poor directors, we find that there was expended for vege-tables upwards of a thousand dollars; also a large amount paid for the hauling of stone. The grand inquest recommend that the vegetables be raised by the inmates and that the stone be hauled by the county teams, thereby saving to the taxpayers the amount of these expenditures.

At the suggestion of the court we examined the large stock of surplus tobacco, advertised by the prison inspectors to be sold on Thursday, April 22d, 1880, and took action in the matter, in the following resolution, a copy of which was handed to the president of the board.

WHEREAS, The board of prison inspectors of the county of Lancaster have advertised a public sale of tobacco, to take place at the prison this day;

UDDERZOOK'S CONFESSION.

The Complete Story of a Terrible Crime.

Conspiracy and Murder. The readers of the Intelligencer are still familiar with the story of the terrible Udderzook-Goss murder near Penningtonville, Chester county, some six years ago; and of Udderzook's trial and execution, through the course of which it was developed that the plot first was to pretend that Goss was dead and get his assurance, greeted every feature of the programme, and when Goss persisted in turning up showed how keenly the feast of fun Udderzook brought him to Chester county was enjoyed by the immense audience, and murdered him. The evidence, though | which occupied every seat in the house circumstancial, was very conclusivebut Udderzook went to his death with his lips sealed. The career of him and Goss up to the night of the murder was carefully traced in the evidence given on the trial, but the details of the crime itself were never before known. To-day to animadvert somewhat severely upon the Herald publishes Udderzook's full con- the disappointing entertainment. The fession, attested by his counsel, J. F. fun last night ran fast and furious from Perdue, who says he gave it to him to the outset, and never once flagged until publish after a specified time, which has the curtain descended on the ridiculous now ensued. It describes fully the origi. parade scene in the closing burlesque, nal plot between him and Goss to cheat "Grant's Reception," in which the the insurance companies, Goss's persistence appearance of the "Silent Man on in reappearing, his suspicion of him, the Horseback" provoked screams of necessity of him saving himself and finally laughter. Among the features of the his resolve to murder Goss—all as might be programme were Mr. Carneross's singing drawn from the testimony adduced on the of "The Blue Alsatian Mountains," which, trial and substantially confirming it. The though old, is never sung as Carneross newest and most interesting part of the sings it; the audience listened entranced confession is that which relates to his kill- and of course encored him. This he at last consented to do, as he was growing weak; he had been sick and was getting sick again. We accordingly went to the woods and sat down by a stream and Goss went to sleep. This was and Mr. Mettler has a number of new and my time; but, as I looked at him, my heart failed me. Several times I tried to Family," Murphy, Morton, Griffin summon courage to do it, but I could not. I hadn't it in me. If I had only had a bottle of whisky with me to nerve me up I would have done it and probably have avoided detection. But I then concluded that my best plan was to take him up to Sam Rhoades's and give him something in his whisky and quietly bury him. I knew Rhoades had always borne rather a bad character and ing exceptionally fine. On the whole it would, I thought, do anything for money. I concluded I would take the risk and if he refused to help me I thought my sisterhis wife-would board him for a while until something could be done.

They did not get as far as Rhoads's, but P. will give a hop in Roberts's hall, and a fine stopped at Udder book's mother's. Next time is expected, as the management is in day he went over to Rhoads, but the latter was suspicious of him and when Udderzook talked about the strange man with money dying at Rhoads's house he was scared. He finally consented that the shaved Pine Shingles. stranger be brought to his house to stay awhile. The livery team was hired at Penningtonville to bring Goss over, but on his way for him Udderzook says he again began to get feaaful that he would reveal the true condition of things and he resolved to kill him. That terrible ride from Jennerville to Penningtonville and its tragic end Udderzook thus describes:

The evening was warm and we drove rather slowly. Goss was swearing about being brought into such a country place and was complaining. I was rather disposed to quarrel with him, and going up we quarreled considerably. When we got above Cochranville to a woods I had noticed in the morning, and which I had selected for the purpose, I drove in among some chestnut sprouts. I did not think Goss would notice where we were going, but he did, and exclaimed, "Where are you taking me! are you going to kill me?" I at that instant stopped the horse, threw down the lines and putting my left arm around his head covered his mouth with my left hand; with the right I drew out the knife I had made at Baltimore for the purpose and cut his throat. It was the work of an instant. He made no noise and very little resistance, for I held him like a vice. The blood, of course, ran over everything he bled awfully, until, finallly, his body becoming weak, I released my hold, and i doubled down upon the bottom of the wagon, smashed the front of the dashboard over and bent the irons. While I was holding him, until he bled, to be sure my work was completed, I stabbed him in the heart, and this accounts for the numerous wounds found upon the body. Heavens, how I felt for his heart with that long, slender blade.

When he was senseless I took him out of the wagon and laid him on the ground and went back with the wagon to a stream of water we had passed. Here I washed the wagon thoroughly, having first taken out the oilcloth that was in the bottom. I also washed the blood off myself. I had black pantaloons on, and the blood and water did not show on them The worst was on my shirt, but I took it off and washed the stains out of that, and it only looked like a sweated shirt. After washing the wagon I was very much exhausted and and drank the balance of the whisky in the bottle, fixed up the dashboard of the wagon as best I could, and took the wagon back to Penningtonville. After leaving the wagon I went and sat down on a plat form near the railroad, intending to rest a best play, and he has appeared in it over 1,000 times. This will be his fourth visit to this city, few minutes, but fell asleep, and woke with a start for fear it was nearly morning. I and as he has always drawn well, the house don't know how long I had slept, but l hurried up and started back. I had seen a spade at Rhoades's when I had been there that day, standing in the stable. I stopped at Rhoades's, got this and proceeded on my way. My idea was to so disfigure the body as to prevent identification if it should be found! tore took the clothes off it cut it ap as it was found, and battered the head with the spade. The digging was very hard. The ground was dry and there were so many roots that I had great difficulty in digging a hole to bury the body in. And here is where I made a fatal mistake, for if I had only dug that grave a little deeper no one would ever have known.

After burying the body I made a fire Andrew Eichholtz, of the 4th ward, this and burned the bloody clothes, horse cover, started to Gennerville. I stopped at Coch ranville and got my breakfast, then went on and stayed with my mother for a few days and then went back to Baltimore tively for the appointment of John R. Erb Goss's ring was pulled off in some way in the wagon, and I did not notice the loss until I was searching for his trinkets. He had with him the ratchet screw driver, some old and curious coins and various other things. These I took with me, and, with the knife with which I did the deed, dropped them into the Susquehanna river as I crossed the bridge on my return to Balti-

> This is the true story, and I am sure those who read it will believe that I would never have gone into this if I had foreseen the necessity for murder. But the killing of Goss became a matter of necessity for my own preservation. I tried this last chance and have clost. I desire to say that I and I alone am responsible for W. S. Goss and A. C. Goss knw anything about the conspiracy.

Carneross's Minstrels at the Opera House Fulton opera house was crowded last night by one of the most brilliant assemblages that has gathered there during the season. It was literally an ovation to the old-time favorites, Mr. J. L. Carneross and the superior troupe of artists in the min strel line of which he has long been the head. The enthusiastic approbation that up-stairs and down, while "standing room only" was eagerly taken possession of by such as failed to secure better accommodations. JERSEY JUSTICE.

Hanging at Newtown—A Disappointed and Indignant Crowd—Denied a View of the Execution. NEWTOWN, N. J., April 24.-Frederick Crill was hanged here at 11:21 this morning. He met his fate with more composure than had been expected.

The jury of 24 men, who alone were permitted to witness the execution, arrived at 10 a. m. The utmost caution was taken to prevent any of the large crowds who had gathered into the town from getting a glimpse of the execution. At 11:21 Crill was taken from his cell. Mr. Zabriskie offered an impressive prayer. Crill stood erect, but with great difficulty. When the drop fell he made no violent struggle and seemed to die easy. The crowd outside made desperate efforts to get a view, climbing on the tops of houses and high fences, and were considerably enraged by their disappointment. The affair was attended with much excitement, but the town was otherwise quiet. A brass band played in front of the court house during the execution. When the sheriff put on the handcuffs Crill requested him to take them off and warm them, and also to warm the noose. He expressed himself as prepared to die.
