LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE REPUBLICAN SHINDY.

THE COUNT PROCEEDED WITH.

Jake Price's Spirited Interruptions.

Davis Declared the Republican Candidate for District Attorney.

Some time during yesterday's session of the Republican return judges meeting the president was found. Meantime the count was proceeded with. District after district was read and recorded. The tiresome monotony of the reading of the long columns of figures was happily broken by the spirited remarks of Jake Price, who was almost constantly on his feet from the commencement to the close of the session.

Our limited space, and the restrictive law against the publication of obscene literature, precludes the possibility of reproducing Mr. Price's remarks in full. Suffice it to say, he was all eye, all ear, all tongue, and all muscle, and having read and approved the Jeffersonian maxim that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," he appointed himself an eternal vigilance committee of one to watch Jack Fry, Sam Groff, Al Edwards, Thad. Dickey, & the entire election board. He suspected all of them of being dash dashed frauds, and he might be blank blanked if he didn't keep an eye on all of them. At every movement made by any one of them, he would cry out, "I'm a watching of you—drop that paper—what are you sticking in your pocket there? Mr. President, I move this convention is a fraud, and I want the motion brought in front of the house. Fry, how much did you get for sellin' us out? There you go again, changin' more figures. If you do that again may I be blank blanked if I don't jump on the stage and tear all the dash dashed papers to dash. Do you hear? I move we adjourn for an hour and I want that motion put in front of the house—it's always in order. You won't put it? Then I'll leave."

And Jake went out, greeted with cheers and laughter. But he soon returned, having evidently "seen a man," and, taking a front seat, became more eloquent and demonstrative than before.

Meantime the count went on and even Jake's vigorous remonstrances began to lose their interest when another matter was brought to the attention of the convention. President Fry presented a communication from Adam J. Eberly, in which he declared his belief that he had been chosen the Republican candidate for district attorney, and that that fact could be proved if a fair investigation were had; but had reason to believe that a majority of the committee of investigation intended to stifle investigation; and he therefore asked the board to direct the committee to fully investigate the alleged frauds, and give timely notice of the time of the meeting to the candidates interested.

Squire Reidenbach presented a resolution (also in Mr. Eberly's hand-writing) embodying Mr. Eberly's views, and moved its adoption.

Mr. Groff protested that the only business before the convention was the counting of the returns. After this shall have been finished the convention may consider other business if it be deemed necessary.

Chairman Fry thought the present the proper time to consider "Squire Reidenbach's resolution, as it had reference to the contested districts.

Maj. Cox asked the chairman whether any contested district had been counted; and Mr. Fry answered "No." Major Cox asked if it was the intention to count any contested district before the committee of investigation reported upon it; and Mr. Fry again answered "No." "Then," said Major Cox, "let us go on with the counting of the uncounted districts." (Cheers.)

President Fry insisted that the resolution of Squire Reidenbach was before the house and must be considered.

Several delegates declared the resolution out of order, and appealed from the decision of the chair, but the chair would not entertain the appeal.

A vote was then taken on the question of considering the resolution, and it was voted down almost unanimously.

The counting of the returns was resumed, and Jake Price resumed his watch. He appeared to be even more suspicious of his friend Fry than of his enemy Groff, and he swore by all the oaths of which he had command that if either of them touched another paper he would jump upon the stage and tear them all to hell. He attempted to make his words good, and springing over the railing of the orchestra he was in the act of clambering upon the stage when he was seized by two policemen and pulled down. There were loud cries of put him out, but Sammy Groff interceded for him and he was permitted to remain on condition that he would be quiet and not disturb the business of the convention. Disgusted with what he regarded as the villainy of the officers of the board, Jake again left, but soon returned warmer than ever.

The count went on with nothing to enliven it except Mr. Price's eloquence until late in the afternoon on motion the convention adjourned to the next day.

Soon afterwards it was announced that the committee on investigation was ready to report.

The chair looked stunned and doubted if there was a quorum present, and unless there was the report could not be received. Against the protest of nearly the whole convention he ordered the roll to be called. Thirty-one districts answered. The chair declared there was no quorum. Bob Evans declared the chair to be a dash-dash man. Major Cox read the rule of the party made to govern such cases, showing that a majority of the return judges then present should determine contested districts.

The chair refused to receive the report. An appeal was taken from his decision and the appeal was sustained.

The report was then presented. The chair insisted on putting the districts on record, and demanded a call of the yeas and nays.

Great confusion followed and the call was finally abandoned, and the president finally agreed to receive the report, for rather reports, for there were two of them.

They were read as follows: Principal Report. We the undersigned, committee of investigation on contested election districts made the following report:

The contested returns of Mountville, Third ward city, Mount Joy township, (Breneman's school house), Third ward Columbia, Union Square (10th election district), Warwick township and Conestoga townships, shall be received and counted as shown on the face of the returns.

In the Sixth ward, city, for director of the poor, Martin Kreider had 123 votes on the tally sheet, while on return paper he was given 103 votes. This committee declares that Martin Kreider should receive the number of votes as shown on the tally sheet—123 votes; and the remainder of the return be counted as upon the return papers and tally sheets.

In the Seventh ward, city, the delegates and alternates are given on the return, 282 votes, but there appears no tally sheet. This committee decides that the votes for delegates and alternates shall not be received; otherwise the returns be counted as returned.

In the Eighth ward, city, one of the inspectors and one of the clerks have signed the returns under protest; there are no tally-sheets or poll books, and the rules of the party require that these shall be returned to the judges; therefore, we, the undersigned members of the committee, protest and decide against the counting of any of the returns from the Eighth ward, city.

OUR FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Annual Visit by the Councils Committee.

Inspection of Apparatus—Satisfactory Work of the Steamers. Yesterday afternoon Walter M. Franklin, esq., chairman of the committee on fire engine and hose companies of city councils, Messrs. Chas. E. Downey and John J. Hartley, members of the committee, and Messrs. Wm. J. Foidney, and assistant engineers of the city fire department made their annual visit to the several engine houses of the city, for the purpose of inspecting the hoses, engines and other apparatus, as required by city ordinance. Dr. John Levering, president of common council, happened along as the party was preparing to start, was invited to join them, and the INTELLIGENCER man met with a similar courtesy, and promptly stepped into one of the coaches waiting to bear the inspectors on their pilgrimage. They were soon speeding up West King street Hill, down which the "Big 6" is wont to thunder with such amazing alacrity at the first call of distress. The engine house of the Humane is situated on Manor street just in from West King. It is a low, rather dilapidated-looking structure that has withstood the storms of a good many years, but is kept clean and in as good order as circumstances will permit. The company is erecting a new house on West King street, just above the Green Tree hotel, and visitors were invited to see the site of the new structure to see what is going on there. The cellar has been dug, foundation laid and first floor timbers put down. The building will be 32 feet front by 100 feet in depth, with an altitude of 38 feet, and when completed will probably be one of the handsomest engine houses in the city. The ground which the structure is to occupy has been bought and paid for with $1,700, in addition to which $1,200 has thus far been expended on the work done. The company has secured a loan of $3,500, and the amount additional necessary to complete the work is about $1,700, which will be raised by subscription. The entire cost of the new building will be something over $8,000. Those of our citizens who may be waited on in this behalf will no doubt promptly respond to the appeal made to their liberality; for they may be sure of a judicious expenditure of their contributions, and the Humane boys are deserving of generous aid in their effort to acquire a building that will be attractive in architectural design and complete in its appointments.

The trim little Jones and Hayes steamer of the company with its mountings shining like burnishing silver, stood at the corner of West King and Charlotte streets, surrounded by a large crowd of men and boys, as the committee arrived on the scene. The engineer in charge of the pretty little machine was Alonzo Gotschalk. The torch was applied to the furnace of the boiler, and within 9 minutes, despite a few unlooked-for delays, the engine was working smoothly and noiselessly, throwing a heavy stream of water down Charlotte street through 500 hundred feet of gum hose. The engine and four-wheel hose carriage are in good order, and the ten sections (500 feet) of gum hose belonging to the city is also in perfect condition, the firemen reporting it as giving entire satisfaction.

The next point visited was the Shiffer No. 7 engine house, South Queen street, where the handsome steamer, a fourth-class (3,600 pounds) engine made by Cole Brothers, of Pawtucket, R. I., was in charge of its efficient engineer, Thomas Anderson, and his fireman, Wm. Weninger and Daniel Young. The engine was in admirable condition and got up steam in 7 minutes after applying the fire. Mr. Anderson took a paragonable degree of pride in explaining to his visitors the beauties of his engine, which, among many admirable features, has an arrangement by which the water may be turned off and on again while the engine continues in action, and water is kept in the boiler continuously. With 60 pounds of steam the engine can draw 160 pounds water pressure and play at this rate through an inch nozzle three hours without stopping. The engine house of the Shiffer is kept in good order, the hall is an airy, commodious apartment, with nicely frescoed walls, which are hung with pictures, flags and ensigns, while the company owns a number of fine trophies in the shape of silver fire horns, etc. There are also two handsome four-wheel hose carriages, and besides the 500 feet of new gum hose recently purchased by the city, 450 feet of good leather hose and a single section of unserviceable leather hose. The plug in front of the engine house leads and should receive attention.

At the engine house of the Sun No. 1, on East Vine street, George Anne, engineer and Benjamin Bobach, fireman, were waiting for their guests, together with a number of the firemen, and the usual crowd of curious spectators. The steamer, a large third-class Houpt, of 7000 pounds weight, loaded and ready for use, is in good working condition, and raised steam in six minutes and a-half, executing its work efficiently and standing "as solid as a rock" while playing heavy streams through two lines of hose, in all 850 feet. Mr. Anne courteously answered all queries of his visitors. With twenty-five pounds of steam, his engine draws 70 water pressure. The company has one four-wheel hose carriage, 850 feet of good gum hose, and one section of bad hose not in service. The machinery is kept clean and in good order, and the house and property are tidy and well-kept.

The American engine, standing at the corner of East King and Shippens streets, looked bright and shiny like a new gold dollar, the painting and other decoration it has lately received making it one of the prettiest pieces of machinery in the department. It is a second-class Amoskeag engine, manufactured at Manchester, N. H., of 6,219 weight. Chief Engineer Isaac Kinnear was not present, but the steamer was in charge of his experienced assistants, Gen. E. Blair and Geo. Kieffer, with John Wertz officiating as fireman. The torch was applied and in six minutes by the watch the little beauty was doing her work noiselessly and gracefully as the heart of the most critical engineer could desire. The appearance of the engine house did not very favorably impress the inspecting visitors, and they did not long linger within its precincts. Besides the 500 feet of city gum hose, which is in admirable condition, as is indeed all the apparatus, the company has a section of American double jacket cotton hose of its own, one large and handsome four-wheel hose carriage and one smaller two-wheel vehicle. The Union No. 1 engine was tried at the INTELLIGENCER corner, Centre square and South Queen streets, and a large and interested crowd of spectators witnessed the performance. This is the "old reliable" Button steamer of the third class, 4,800 pounds weight. It is always in order, always looks well, and the committee were pronounced in their admiration of its fine appearance and good work. Chief Engineer Jacob R. Waters was in charge, assisted by his subordinates, Frank Spicer, Charles Smith and Byron Cammin. In six minutes the engine was moving quietly and effectively, and Engineer Waters pointed with pride to the steady work of the machine, which, without any artificial support, scarcely quivered under the pressure brought to bear upon it. The Union one, besides their steamer, a three-wheel hose cart, and a two-wheel reel. They use hoses in drawing their engine and cart to fires. Their 500 feet of new gum hose provided by the city is in good condition, and they have also 400 feet of old gum hose belonging to the city, 400 feet of old gum hose, their own, which is good for 60 pounds pressure, and a hundred feet of their own new gum hose.

The Washington No. 4 engine is of Neafie & Levy build, third class, 6,450 pounds. It was in charge of Chief Engineer Jacob Herzog and four assistants—Harry Blichenderger, John W. Samson, William Klithvon and William Thompson. The engine worked in five minutes after applying the torch. Engineer Herzog informed his visitors that the engine has cost nothing for repairs, except new flues, since its purchase in 1867, and it is in admirable order. He showed an attachment with which the engine is provided for thawing out frozen plugs, by which precious time may be saved at a fire on a cold winter day, and also a very clever arrangement for gauging the stream to a one-story, two-story or three-story building, as the case may be, by a simple turn of a valve on the engine. The new city hose is in good order, and the "Washy" own, besides, 200 feet of old hose that will stand 40 pounds, together with a quantity of unserviceable hose. The four-wheel carriage is like the steamer, kept neat and pretty, while the hall is comfortably furnished and carpeted, and the walls decorated with pictures and various emblems. The grounds in the rear are also tastefully laid out in well-kept flower beds and grass plot. The plug in front of the engine house is bad and should be replaced by a new one. This company employs horses in hauling the steamer to fires.

The Friendship No. 2, whose handsome engine house stands on North Duke street, at the railroad bridge, was next visited. They have a fine third-class Jeffers engine, of 4,600 weight. Its polished mountings and bright paint almost dazzled the eyes of the spectator as it stood in the sun, a thing of beauty and a joy forever. In the absence of Chief Engineer James Fellenbaum, Daniel Trewitz, Jr., his assistant, was in charge. The time required to raise steam was six and a-half minutes, and in the examination of the many ingenious features of the engine the visitors were particularly interested in a stop cock by which the man at the pipe can in an instant check the stream, the water being forced back and permitted to escape by a relief valve at the engine. The "machine" worked nobly, and gave entire satisfaction. The engine house was examined and found to be in a clean, tidy condition. A tower in the rear is utilized for drying hose by means of an apparatus on which it is suspended and permitted to drip off. This company has a four-wheel hose carriage, 500 feet of city gum hose, and a quantity of unserviceable old hose. This company also uses horses to draw its steamer.

Just across the street the Empire hook and ladder company No. 1, were waiting for their guests, whom Mr. Harry N. Howell took in charge and showed over the building. The appearance of the handsome gear-necked truck of this company, which was built by C. E. Hart, of New York, and has recently undergone a thorough overhauling and repainting at the works of Messrs. Norbeck & Miley, in this city, is familiar to all who witnessed and admired it in the recent firemen's parade; for to see it is to admire. It is provided with eight ladders, of a total length of 170 feet, seven hooks, four axes, two picks, crow-bar and grappling hook, being complete in all its details for the purposes intended. Mr. Howell took his guests into the hall of the house, which is furnished in a style almost approaching luxury—Brussels carpet on the floor, the walls handsomely papered and hung with pictures. Up in the tower, whither the visitors wended their way, and whence a splendid view of the city is obtained, is the big alarm bell, which has become the unerring signal of fire, and the sounding of which without positive knowledge of the existence and location of the fire the company has provided against by enacting a heavy fine for the transgression of the law. J. K. Metzger is the chief director of the company. Thos. C. Wiley assistant director for the first district and July Levy, Jr. for the second.

At this point the pilgrimage came to an end, and the committee, pretty well tired out by the afternoon's work, desisted from further inspection from sheer lack of further material to inspect. On the whole the condition of our volunteer fire department was found to be eminent. By satisfactory and too much praise cannot be awarded to the brave men who belong to the several companies and who are constantly subjecting themselves not merely to all manner of discomfort, but to actual danger in their battling with the fire fiend without hope of further reward than the consciousness of work done in a noble cause. The meagre appropriation of councils is a small item in the annual expenses of the companies, and their creditable efforts to keep themselves abreast should always meet with a hearty response. Chief Engineer of the Fire Department Fordney, who was one of yesterday's inspecting party, says there are three things necessary to the completion of the efficiency of the department, and they are a telegraphic fire alarm, ropes with which to surround the scene of fire, and badges for the firemen by which they might be distinguished from the mass of humanity that usually congregates up a such occasions; persons wearing such badges to be admitted within the ropes, and 1 others rigorously excluded, in order that the effective work of the firemen might not be interfered with by outsiders, who, under the present order of things, crowd themselves in the way, and constitute a source of serious annoyance.
