COMMENCEMENT DAYS.

CLOSE OF THE FESTIVITIES AT FRANKLIN AND MARSHALL.

The Baccalaureate Orations Yesterday Afternoon—The College Closed for the Summer Vacation—The Fraternity Reunions.

Baccalaureate Orations at the College.

The graduating exercises of the class of 1880 of Franklin and Marshall college, which were reported up to noon yesterday in last evening's paper, were resumed in the afternoon, the chapel being again crowded by the friends of the students and of the college. The exercises opened with an overture—"Seven Sisters"—by Keffler's orchestra, and then Mr. William N. Apple of Lancaster, who divided the salutatory honor with Mr. Netscher, delivered an oration, his theme being "The Law of Historical Progress." Law, he said, reigns supreme in the handwork of God. Order and regularity in His creation beautifully typify and manifest His infinite wisdom. From the cradles of inert matter to the highest forms of developed life there is one grand exhibition of that universal law, whose plastic genius is co-existent with the attributes of Divinity. It is the unfolding of this internal principle or law in man which, in view of his infinite faculties and boundless potentialities, constitutes the law of indefinite progress in the life of every individual. The rise and fall of nations, the migrations of peoples and tribes, have a peculiar significance in the great movements of history. In the successive manifestations of an unknown power may perceive a positive law, whose effect upon the student of history is manifest, transforming him as by wand of a magician, a chaotic monotony, disjointed and disconnected incidents and facts into a most beautiful, systemized plan of development. The victory of the moral law finds its culmination in the triumph of the Divine will and the subjugation of the powers arrayed against it. In the advancing generations of men history is ever changing yet ever pursuing its one course of development, guided by the law of progress. It is a mighty stream which flows ever onward guided by a power beneath. Poor, weak man may with his human efforts modify and change the surface of the mighty deep, but he can never change its course. Humanity ever advances. The march of progress is to the age. Thus does the law of human progress

And justify the eternal Providence.

Oration—"The Victory of Peace"—Mr. Frederick W. Biesecker, Jemmer X Roads, Pa. Military achievements of the hero have ever claimed the admiration of the world. The deeds of the general and conqueror swell on the pages of history. Under the benign influence of Christianity and civilization, however, man seeks for something higher, more ennobling, and more enduring. His eyes are turned to his own nature, and he finds that the circumstances which have most influence on the happiness of mankind are created not by the achievements of war, but in the noiseless realm of peace. The influences which influence religion, science, art, literature and all that tends to truly elevate and ennoble man are cultivated. Here we find the only true and permanent progress of any people, the progress of knowledge and power. Peace is the basis of all progress, and it is the glory and prosperity of nations. It has victories in comparison with which Marathon, Bannockburn and Dunker Hill fields, held sacred in the history of human freedom, lose their lustre. They are won by those who conquer by patience and suffering, laboring for a higher regard for justice, for the elevation of fellow men; whose names, though not always found in the records of man, shall be recorded in the register of everlasting life. That higher civilization which is coming shall recognize the peculiar Christian sentiment, when every people shall recognize God as a common father, when distinctions shall disappear and the various people of the globe stand forth as brother members of one human family, and when the last footprints of war shall disappear and humanity bow under the leadership of Him who is above all others—the Prince of Peace.

Music—Aria, "Thou Art My Own"—Keffler's orchestra.

Oration—"The Lotus Eaters"—Mr. Henry C. Eschbach, Paradise, Pa. The orator, after quoting from Tennyson a passage describing the land of the "mid-eyed, melancholy Lotus-Eaters," dwelt at length upon the beauties of that strange country where the sun shone from a cloudless sky upon fruits and flowers; where soft, drowsy winds blew gently through velvet foliage; where sleepy rivers sparkled in the sunlight like paths of diamonds; and beyond the smiling lotus plants the blue mountains towered in silence and beauty; where the sea waves as they retired to the bosom of an mother ocean, sank lazily to sleep upon the sandy beach, and the mild inhabitants reclined on mossy banks, in the cool shade feasting on the ripe, mellow fruit, and drinking of the rich dark wine, which they so soft, drowsy winds blew gently through velvet foliage; where sleepy rivers sparkled in the sunlight like paths of diamonds; and beyond the smiling lotus plants the blue mountains towered in silence and beauty; where the sea waves as they retired to the bosom of an mother ocean, sank lazily to sleep upon the sandy beach, and the mild inhabitants reclined on mossy banks, in the cool shade feasting on the ripe, mellow fruit, and drinking of the rich dark wine, which they so soft, drowsy winds blew gently through velvet foliage;
