THE WILEY PLOW.

The Inventor of a Popular Farm Implement-Kennett Advance.

The late Bernard Wiley was known throughout Chester county in connection with the justly celebrated Wiley plow, which for many years was the favorite furrow turner. Many people supposed that Mr. Wiley was the inventor of the plow, but such is not the fact. The father of Bernard Wiley owned the farm in Kennett 1,440, township, on which the late Wm. Cloud resided. It was an entail and had descended to several generations. The older brother of Bernard was James, and by the law of 531. entailment the property became his on the death of his father. But James held that this was unjust and offered to release all interest in the farm if Bernard would pay him half its value. This was done and James left home with his money. He went to Peekskill, New York, where he pureral years and when he sold out his interest he came to Kennett and set up in the. same business. But he found that he could make more money by retailing the finished plows than by making them himself, and, as he controlled all this county any competition. In the meantime Hiram Hall, who had been a plow maker, having manufactured the bar-share, many of them with wooden mold-boards, set up in Kenbut as this interfered with the trade of the house of refuge. latter the castings were very slow at coming. Finally Mr. Hallmentioned his trouble to Henry Brosius, a storekeeper in the place, and the two men formed an alliance and endeavored to buy their plows directly from the factory at Peek-They called to their aid the scholarly Samuel Martin, whom they hoped would be able to write a letter that day, on account of the "Glorious Fourth" would bring the manufacturer to terms, but this failed. As a last resort Messrs. Hall and Brosius raised $500, and giving into the hands of James Green, directed him to go to Peekskill and purchase eastings. He did so and to allay suspicion had them shipped to Wilmington, where. however, they unluckily fell into the hands of Wiley's agent, who conveyed tiem to his own premises. Hiram Hall at once went to Wilmington and succeeded at length in getting his property. When these were used up, James Green was sent to journed to meet for that purpose on July Peekskill a second time. He was at once 15. recognized and closely questioned, and when the founders discovered that the Chester county plow makers were determined to have castings, they sent Mr. Green home with the message that Hall and Brosius might have all the stock they wanted. Mr. Hall continued in the trade for several years, the best market being in Lancaster county, where left handed plows sold for $12.
